Hunt Swears His Requests Of Vaughan Were Trivial

Never Asked More Than Aid in Getting Football Tickets, He Says in Affidavit

By The Associated Press

James V. Hunt, a key figure in the 5-percenter inquiry, said last night he never has asked Maj. Gen. Harry H. Vaughan for anything more important than tickets to an Army-Notre Dame football game.

And Hunt flatly denied that he ever made the statement: "All I have to sell is influence." A witness at the investigation testified under oath that Hunt did say that.

Hunt, self-described Washington management counselor, said it seems to him the Senate inquiry has produced "conclusive evidence of the absence of any improper influence" on his part.

Hunt made his statements in an affidavit to a special Senate subcommittee checking on whether any such influence has figured in the handling of government business.

Fat Fees Reported

The committee has received testimony that Hunt collected fat fees for help in getting government contracts for others, and that he boasted of an inside track to the White House through Vaughan.

Vaughan, who is President Truman's military aide, is scheduled to testify at the inquiry Tuesday. His name, like Hunt's has bobbed up at the hearings nearly every day.

In his affidavit Hunt said he met Vaughan for the first time in 1945 shortly after Vaughan became a presidential aide.

A former lieutenant colonel in the Army, Hunt said he saw a good deal of Vaughan when he (Hunt) was liaison officer for the quartermaster general and later as liaison officer for the War Assets Administration.

"Although we have become good friends socially," Hunt said, "I have never to the best of my recollection, asked General Vaughan to do anything for me or for a client or friend of mine more important than getting football tickets to the Army-Notre Dame football game."

No More Than Matches

As for whether Vaughan ever sought favors from him, Hunt said:

"I have no recollection of his ever asking me to do anything more important than to get a supply of matches for Ambasasdor Pauley or for a fresh supply for the White House."

(The testimony at the hearings was that matches were sought for William D. Powley, former Ambassador to Brazil. The name of Edwin W. Pauley, also a former Ambasasdor, has not figured in testimoney regarding matches.)

The committee has wanted to call Hunt to the witness stand, but doctors have told the investigators he is too ill to testify. They reported he won't be able to go before the committee for at least a month.

In the affidavit Hunt told the

17,500 Quit At Goodrich Tire Plants

Observers Look To Fact-Finding in Steel for Pattern For Rubber Accord

By Sam Stavisky
Post Reporter

The first major strike in the rubber industry since before the war broke out yesterday when 17,500 members of the CIO United Rubber Workers walked out of seven B. F. Goodrich plants around the country.

At Akron, Ohio, heart of the industry, a Goodrich spokesman charged that the union had selected the company as a guinea-pig in an attempt to win a fourth postwar wage increase.

Experienced management-labor relations observers here believe, however, that the peace pattern for the fourth round will be established around the recommendations of the President's steel industry fact-finding committee. The three-man committee is scheduled to report on Tuesday its findings in the wage-pension dispute between "Big Steel" and the CIO United Steelworkers.

Something of a Surprise

The Goodrich strike—affecting 13,000 union workers in Akron and 4500 others in Tuscaloosa, Ala., Cadillac, Mich., Clarksville, Tenn., Oaks, Pa., Miami, Okla., and Los Angeles—came as something of a surprise.

Observers had been generally taking it for granted that the United Rubber Workers, with a record of peaceful postwar negotiations, would wait at least until the report of the fact-finding committee in steel before taking strike action against Goodrich.

It was further believed by some observers the walkout would be deferred until the union settled its bitter internecine strife at its convention, due to be held in mid-September at Toronto.

The United Rubber Workers began negotiating last spring for a 25-cent wage increase with the industry's "Big Four"—Goodyear, U. S. Rubber, Firestone, and Goodrich. But because its contracts with the other companies do not expire until next year, the union concentrated its fire on Goodrich. The latter's work contract with the United Rubber Workers expired yesterday. The strike began at 12:01 a. m. yesterday.

First to Be Specific

The United Rubbers Workers was the first of the CIO industry-wide affiliates to declare itself in specific terms for the fourth round. As far back as February, the union announced it would demman 25-cents-an-hour wage increases and $100-a-month pensions for its 180,000 members, as well as health and welfare benefits.

The rubber workers won a total of 41 cents in the first three post-war rounds of wage increases, setting the pace with 11½ cents for the second round. Hitherto, the union dealt on an industry-wide basis with rubber's "Big Four," but with an end to the seller's market in rubber tires, with a cut in rubber tire prices, and with a sharp rise in competition, the companies balked at the single-table negotiations.

Forced to Act, Lloyd Says

In Dayton, Ohio, where peace negotiations broke off yesterday, President H. R. Lloyd, of the union, declared:

"Unfortunately, the company showed not the slightest interest in reaching an amicable settlement. We were compelled to take

Hurricane Kills 3, Scores Hurt; Winds Moving Through Georgia

(Pictures and Other Stories on Page 12)

(From Press Dispatches)

Tampa, Fla., Aug. 27—A once-gigantic hurricane, with winds that reached 162 miles per hour, had spent most of its fury tonight and was passing through Georgia in its death throes.

After doing an estimated 60 million-dollar damage to Florida cities and fruit crops in two assaults across the State, the hurricane passed through Valdosta, Ga. tonight with winds of 40 to 50 miles an hour. It was dissipating its forces rapidly at a late hour tonight.

The first attack last night may rank as the most damaging in history to property in Florida, although loss of life was low. There were three dead and an estimated 75 injured throughout Florida.

Mounting winds of 125 to 162 miles per hour, the storm yesterday savagely raked 250 miles of beach resorts. Then it drove clear across the interior, smashing citrus groves before it veered north, passing 63 miles west of Jacksonville and into Georgia today.

Tides Dangerous

The Weather Bureau said Atlantic tides would be stirred to dangerous heights along the adjacent coast, and hurricane warnings were hoisted from Daytona Beach, Fla., to Charleston, S. C.

Preliminary hurricane damage estimates by localities:

Palm Beach (Red Cross), $2,000,000.

Eastern Lake Okeechobee, $1,500,000.

Fort Pierce (citrus), $2,000,00.

Arcadia (fire), $500,000.

Bartow, $100,000.

Central Florida citrus belt, up to $50,000,000.

Scores of stricken communities still have not assessed their damage or repaired communications to enable a check.

A top official in the citrus industry declared the fruit loss alone may hit 50 million dollars, with 15 million boxes of grapefruit and five million boxes of oranges lost. The spokesman said 25 to 40 per cent of the early crop was lost.

The Coast Guard reported a sustained reading of 162 miles per hour at 7 p. m. EST last night at Jupiter Lighthouse, 18 miles north of West Palm Beach. Then the wind gauge blew away.

Radio towers buckled and crashed. Pines and palms were wrenched from the soil, roofs were hurled into the air and debris beat a tattoo against windows and walls.

West Palm Beach was almost enough to stagger the imagination. A metal and concrete hangar was twisted into scrap. Seventeen-thousand-pound planes—16 of them—

Lucas Assails Plan to Order Budget Cuts

Directive to Truman For 10 Pct. Slashes Hit As Unconstitutional

By James E. Warner
NYHT News Service

President Truman's Senate leader last night attacked as "utterly unconstitutional" and "one of the most dangerous proposals ever advocated" a plan to give the Chief Executive vast new economy powers.

It is the proposal, to be voted upon Monday, that the President be directed to cut all appropriations made at this session by up to 10 per cent. At one time, in late June, it had the support of 62 Senators—25 Democrats and 37 Republicans.

Because it is a legislative provision proposed to be added to an appropriation bill — the pending $14,800,000,000 armed services measure—it will require the support of two thirds of all Senators present Monday.

Senate Democratic Leader Scott W. Lucas of Illinois bitterly assailed the plan in recorded talks to his constituents being broadcast this weekend. He called it "an act of poltical cowardice" which would place "enormous powers and unwarranted duties" in the hands of the President.

Under unanimous consent, and after but brief discussion, the Senate yesterday passed the so-called 70-group Air Force authorization bill previously approved by the House. It struck from the measure, which now must go back to the House, direct reference to 70 groups, 22 separate squadrons and 61 air reserve groups as meaningless, but retained the House authority for 24,000 aircraft or 224,000 air-frame tons.

The measure carries no funds,

3 Are Named As Johnson's Assistants

By the United Press

President Truman yesterday appointed three Assistant Secretaries of Defense, including Paul H. Griffith of Uniontown, Pa., former national commander of the American Legion.

The other appointees were Marx Leva of Selma, Ala., and Wilfred J. McNeil of Boone, Iowa.

The nominations, made under authorization provided in the recently tightened unification act, are subject to Senate confirmation.

All three men have been on Defense Secretary Louis Johnson's Pentagon staff for some time awaiting formal nomination.

The 53-year-old Griffith, a veteran of World War I, served as Johnson's military aide and adviser when the latter went to the Middle East in 1942 on a special mission for President Roosevelt.

Leva has been chief counsel of the national defense establishment and is expected to continue in that job with his new rank. He served as a reserve officer with the Atlantic fleet during World War II.

McNeil has been Johnson's special assistant in charge of budgeting and accounting in the Defense Department, a job he took over in September, 1947, under the late James Forrestal, Johnson's predecessor.

3-Hr. Robeson Concert Riot Injures 13

Veterans and Crowd Clash; 5000 Battle Near Peekskill, N. Y.

Peekskill, N. Y., Aug. 27 (AP).—Marching veterans battled a Paul Robeson concert crowd in a fierce three-hour riot tonight, and at least 13 persons were reported beaten, stabbed or bruised.

The heated battle broke out when a parade sponsored by veterans groups clashed head-on with thousands of concert-goers on a dirt road outside a wooded picnic grove where the Negro singer was to appear.

The veterans' parade was in protest against Robeson's alleged left-wing activities. Some marchers carried placards with anti-Communist slogans.

Newsmen on the scene reported that at least 5000 persons milled around, fighting with rocks, sticks and other weapons.

The crowd, while mostly white, contained many Negroes.

Cars Upset, Fire Started

Automobiles were overturned, and a huge stack of camp chairs was set ablaze, while brass bands and spiritual-singing rang out in the grove.

The veterans had gathered to stage a parade in protest to the concert.

One man was stabbed, another was beaten severely on the head, and 11 other white and Negro persons were treated for bruises and cuts at a hospital. The 11 were reported released later.

State police sent squads of officers to the scene and said they had quelled the milling riot by 9:30 p.m. (EST), some three hours after it started. They made no arrests.

The injured, Peekskill Hospital reported, were beaten with "rocks, clubs, anything they could get their hands on."

Robeson Kept Away

Robeson did not appear.

William L. Patterson, executive secretary of the Civil Rights Congress, which was to benefit from the concert, said he met Robeson en route to the grove, and whisked him away "to a safe place."

He said Robeson was "saved

U. S. Doesn't Blame Socialists For Dollar Crisis, Britain Told

Bevin, Cripps Reported At Odds Over Plan For Currency 'Union'

London, Aug. 27 (AP).—Foreign Secretary Ernest Bevin and economics boss Sir Stafford Cripps will go to the Washington dollar talks in personal disagreement over one of Bevin's ideas, their associates said today.

Prime Minister Attlee has called the British cabinet to all-day talks Monday to approve formally a policy worked out in weeks of back-room discussion.

The Bevin-Cripps cleavage is likely to backdrop the cabinet conference.

Bevin, his associates say, has been plumping for what he calls a full-scale integration of the dollar and pound sterling systems. This possibly could mean a customs union or even a common currency, but informants say Bevin never has made clear just what he has in mind.

American sources in discussing his idea have used the phrase "economic union"—an idea already publicly rejected by Secretary of State Acheson.

Bevin reportedly argues that integration is a logical outcome of Anglo-American diplomatic unity.

Responsible officials in Cripps' department—the Treasury—tartly declare Bevin is no economist.

Cripps takes the view that Britain can win through by producing more goods at less cost and using high-pressure salesmanship to market them for dollars.

Bevin and Cripps will be traveling together on the Mauretania. They leave Wednesday. Bevin originally was booked to sail on the Queen Elizabeth today. He postponed his sailing, informants said, to have another try at getting Cripps to think as he does.

Before the cabinet Monday will be a 15-page brief drawn up by Treasury, Foreign Office and trade officials on the causes and possible cures of Britain's economic plight.

Haile Selassie Helps to Quell Disturbances

Asmara, Eritrea, Aug. 27 (U.P.). Reports from Diredawa, Ethiopia, said today that "serious" disturbances had occurred there and were quelled only after Emperor Haile Selassie intervened.

The reports said the reasons for the disturbances were not clear, but that there had been recent signs of political unrest.

They gave no indications of what form the "disturbances" took.

Tobey Helps Gang Of His Neighbors Fix Bad Roads

Temple, N. H., Aug. 27 (U.P.).—U. S. Senator Charles W. Tobey—who's 69—joined a pick and shovel road gang made up of neighbors today "to fix up some bad roads."

"While the rest of the world sits back and waits for the Government of the United States to bail them out these neighbors are helping themselves as they always have," Tobey, a Republican, told newsmen as he helped fill in a quarter-mile of dirt highway.

The 230 residents of the town were all out for the affair—their own, thirty-sixth version of old home day. Afterward everybody attended a New England Grange dinner of baked beans, sweet baked ham, hot bread, rolls which Tobey said were "swimming in butter," and apple pie.

Tropical Yam Is Found to Yield Arthritis Drug

New York, Aug. 27 (AP).—The wonder drug for arthritis, cortisone, can be made from a plant growing at our doorstep, a chemist announced today.

The plant is the tropical yam, or sweet potato, raised for food in Mexico and elsewhere in Latin America. It offers a new, cheaper source for the rare and costly drug, said Dr. Russell E. Marker, research consultant of the Treemond Pharmaceutical Co.

In medical tests, cortisone has brought amazing relief to some persons crippled and in pain from arthritis. But only tiny amounts are being made now, from animal bile. It has to be given in daily injections to keep up the good effects. One day's dose costs at least $20.

Only two weeks ago it was disclosed the drug apparently could be produced from the seeds of a rare African plant. A scientific hunt is under way to learn if this vine can be cultivated.

Dr. Marker said the yam plant may be a quicker source. It contains a chemical, botogenin, which can be used as a raw material for making cortisone, he said. He describes it in the Journal of the American Chemical Society.

The plant, dioscorea, grows naturally in tropical areas of this hemisphere.

Hongkong (Sunday), Aug. 28 (U.P.). Communist armies have captured Lanchow, capital of Kansu Province, and key to Nationalist defenses in the vast northwest area of China, it was announced officially today.

Lanchow was the last remaining major Nationalist defense point in the northwest.

Belgrade Sends Troops To Fiume Harbor Area After Oil Blast, Fire

Trieste, Aug. 27 (U.P.).—Official Italian sources today said that Yugoslav troops had occupied the harbor area at Fiume, where the giant Romsa oil refinery was reported still burning as the result of an explosion Thursday, reportedly set by pro-Russian saboteurs.

Yugoslav troops were also rushed to Pola and the Arsia coal mines in an apparent attempt to check further sabotage, Italian sources said.

200-Mile Trip, Return Made in 'Provocative' Manner, They Assert

Belgrade, Yugoslavia, Aug. 27 (U.P.).—A Russian warship, in "a deliberately provocative manner," steamed 200 miles up the Danube through Yugoslav territory and then back this month, Yugoslav officials said tonight.

These officials said both times the ship, which mounted light guns, defied Yugoslav orders to halt, in outright violation of the river code adopted by the Danube states in August, 1948.

Yugoslavia will "certainly undertake the necessary steps in order to guard the integrity of her territorial waters from similar violations in the future," the officials said.

They said the ship, a monitor, appeared suddenly at Kladovo, on the Romanian frontier, just before dawn August 12.

(A monitor is a small ship, suitable for river navigation, but ships of this type usually mount very heavy guns).

Word of the Soviet vessel's dash along the Danube came early today from irrefutable sources and

Bolivian Rebels Seize Capital Of Province, Enter 2d Key City

La Paz, Bolivia, Aug. 27 (U.P.).—Bolivian Communists and Fascists today joined forces in a military revolt which wrested control of one provincial capital from loyal forces and seized part of another key city, the government announced.

A formal cabinet statement said that quick action by loyal soldiers and civilians crushed uprisings in two other southern provincial capitals. La Paz itself and northern Bolivia were not affected.

The rebels, reportedly led by elements of the Fascistic National Revolutionary Movement and the Communistic Revolutionary Workers Party, struck at dawn in Oruro, Cochabamba, Santa Cruz and Potosi, namesake-capitals of Bolivia's four southernmost provinces.

Acting President Mamerto Urriolagoitia and Interior Minister Alfred Mollinedo said tonight the rebels had seized control of Santa Cruz, 350 miles east-southeast of La Paz.

Insurgent military forces had captured the provincial capitol building in Cochabamba, but loyal police were besieging the rebels.

The opposing forces exchanged shots during the day, but there was no report of casualties. The cabinet report tonight indicated no large-scale fighting had occurred.

Rosy New Tax Outlook Spurs District's Building Program

By Sam Zagoria
Post Reporter

Optimistic reports by Washington merchants and city officials on potential revenue from the city's new taxes have led to a new policy on District government building.

Guy Mason, acting president of the Board of Commissioners, disclosed yesterday that department heads have been directed to submit lists of top priority building needs in the order of urgency.

These will be reviewed by the Commissioners for inclusion in the 1951 fiscal budget, now being prepared. As more cash accumulates from the cigarette, sales and auto excise taxes, additional projects will be incorporated in supplemental appropriation requests, Mason said.

The Commissioner reported that merchants indicate sales tax revenues may run "more than three million dollars above the estimates."

Sales Tax Administrator Allan F. Brooke said several merchants have found sales tax payments to the city will be larger than they had anticipated.

The operator of a small drug store, which handles relatively few taxable items, told Brooke he had expected the tax would run about $20 per month, but he already has computed it will be more than $200, Brooke said.

Budget office officials anticipate $1,125,000 a month from the sales

Republicans Seek To Alter Arms Bill

Hoffman's Advice

Europeans Told to Earn Dollars

New York, Aug. 27 (AP).—Paul G. Hoffman said today he had urged western European nations to get "busy and earn every dollar they could so that they would be in a better position when Marshall Plan aid is decreased."

Back from a 16-day visit to Marshall Plan countries, the Economic Cooperation Administrator said he went to Europe "to hammer home to them the necessity for them to earn dollars and emphasize to them that it is high time they got busy."

Arriving by plane from London, Hoffman told newsmen that "with the help of the Marshall Plan the foundations for European recovery are being firmly laid.

"That is the encouraging fact which I found during my trip to seven of the key European Recovery Plan countries."

He visited France, Italy, Greece, Germany, Belgium, Great Britain and Ireland.

"Looking very realistically at the progress which thus far has been made, I am convinced that European recovery through the Marshall Plan has made significant gratifying headway, both economically and politically," he said.

Hoffman said inflationary situations in many of the participating countries a year ago had been checked, and that production among the free nations of Europe had been raised to 115 per cent compared with prewar levels.

Hoffman will fly to Washington Sunday.

By The Associated Press

Two Republican Senators—Vandenberg of Michigan and Knowland of California—maintained pressure yesterday for major changes in President Truman's $1,450,000,000 arms aid program.

A Senate committee showdown is due shortly on the issues these involve: (1) Whether to cut the western Europe aid figure, and (2) whether to write China into the bill.

Vandenberg refused to drop his demand that Congress make a $160,990,000 slash in proposed military assistance for European members of the Atlantic Alliance, although Gen. Omar N. Bradley told Senate committees Friday that such a cut would be false economy.

Most of the money that the Michigan Senator wants to take out of the program is intended to stimulate arms production in Atlantic Pact countries. He is backing an amendment jointly with Senator Dulles (R., N. Y.).

Retooling in Europe Sought

Bradley, chairman of the Joint Chiefs of Staff, contends the $155 million Mr. Truman asked for this purpose would enable pact members to retool existing factories and produce more than $700 million of arms.

Vandenberg and his supporters argue, however, that increasing western European arms production should await recommendations to be made by the defense council contemplated under the Atlantic Alliance.

They are reported to feel also that helping France to increase its arms-making would be resented in western Germany, where the occupying powers have dismantled many industrial plants.

Vandenberg intends to present his arguments this week to the combined Senate committees on Foreign Relations and Armed Services, which are preparing the arms aid bill for Senate consideration.

Funds Halved by House

It has passed the House, which voted to cut funds for western Europe exactly in half.

Knowland promised a "full-scale review of our policy in the Pacific" when the program reaches the Senate floor.

He said newspaper reports indicate that Administration leaders still do not like his proposal that arms for China be included in the program, although he modified his proposed amendment on this subject yesterday.

"I am going to continue fighting for it in the committees and on the Senate floor," Knowland told a reporter.

The bill carries nothing for China at present. Secretary of State Acheson, who has written off China's Nationalist government as a failure, told Congress recently that the Administration did not feel justified in asking arms for China. But he said a fund that the President could use in the Far East at his discretion would be helpful.

West Germans Seek Rightist Government

Bonn, Germany, Aug. 27 (U.P.)—A secret political conference here last night formally launched efforts to form a right-wing coalition government for western Germany, it was reported today.

Reliable sources said Konrad Adenauer, chairman of the Christian Democratic Party (CDU), and Franz Bluecher, deputy chief of the Free Democratic Party (FDP), reached "general agreement" on the lineup of an all-conservative cabinet.

Seven of the new government's top officials were reportedly agreed upon last night. Those said to have been accepted were: President, Theodor Heuss (FDP); chancellor, Konrad Adenauer (CDU); vice chancellor, Franz Bluecher (FDP); economics, Ludwig Erhard (CDU); interior, Heinrich Weitz (CDU); transport, Edmund Frohne (Independent); posts, Hans Schuberth (CDU).

Leading Socialist politicians are preparing a "basic statement of the opposition" which will keynote the party executive meeting at Bad Kuerkheim Monday.

The 11 ministers-president of west Germany's provinces still hoped the political leaders could agree on a "broad coalition" including the Socialists.

The ministers-president yesterday called in the west German people and their party chiefs to work for such a government.

Warnings of Japanese War Began Reaching U. S. in 1933

By The Associated Press

Warnings of war with Japan began reaching the State Department as early as 1933, it was disclosed yesterday in secret state papers made public by the department.

The warnings came from a variety of sources as Japan pushed her Far Eastern conquest.

Britain, France and other countries were trying, the record shows, to work out through the League of Nations some way to check Japanese expansion. The United States in the closing days of the Hoover Administration, while following a policy of non-recognition of Japan's puppet state "Manchukuo," held a firm position against using economic sanctions to stop the Tokyo empire builders.

After the Roosevelt Administration began on March 4, 1933, the State Department advised the British Embassy on March 11 that Congress would be asked to authorize embargoes on belligerent states. But it also declared that it saw no useful purpose to be served then by embargoing arms shipments to both Japan and China.

On February 7, an American Embassy official in Paris reported that in the opinion of a French diplomat Japan had been preparing for war. He felt she intended to possess the chain of islands along the Asiatic coast, including the Philippines, "so as to make her complete mistress of the Asiatic continent." The diplomat saw in this a sign that Japanese preparations for war were aimed directly at the United States.

The U. S. Embassy official added that a well known French naval expert had suggested that while American naval strength in the Far East was necessary, Japan's "great adversary" was Russia because Japan was aiming at expansion on the Asiatic continent.

On March 9, 1933, Ambassador Joseph C. Grew at Tokyo sent the Department lengthy intelligence from a "reliable Soviet source" reporting among other things that the Japanese were fortifying Bonin Islands in the western Pacific, and also the Japanese mandated islands, and that this work "is directed against the United States."

On March 17, Theodore Marriner, ranking diplomat in the American Embassy at Paris, quoted a "French authority" as saying that the French general staff "expects Japan to pursue a policy of expansion in the Pacific, and that country may not stop short of an attempt to take the Philippines."

Senate Votes Federal Grants To States for Public Health

By The Associated Press

The Senate yesterday passed a bill for expanding local public health facilities through Federal grants to States.

The measure, which now goes to the House, authorizes no specific appropriation. That is left for Congress to determine each year.

Federal grants to the States would be on the basis of need for facilities, population and relative financial need.

Under the present public health law, the Federal Government makes grants to the States for programs against tuberculosis, venereal disease and heart disease. Grants are provided also to assist the States and local subdivisions in establishing and maintaining public health services of a general nature.

The bill would continue the aid program in the three specific fields and also help the States to set up full programs for local areas.

Southampton, England, Aug. 27 (U.P.).—A British surgeon said today that United States Ambassador Lewis W. Douglas had regained some sight in his left eye, injured four months ago in a fishing accident.

E. C. Zorab, one of the eye specialists who had been treating Douglas since a fishhook pierced his eye in April, examined the Ambassador here today just before the American left for New York aboard the Queen Elizabeth.

Zorab reported the eye was "doing well," but did not comment on the prospects for complete recovery.

Douglas is on his way to Washington, where he will attend next month's American-British-Canadian financial talks. He is scheduled to start back to London September 21.

'Scientist X' Facing Ex-G-Men's Snare

By The Associated Press

House spy hunters say three former Federal agents may snap shut a perjury case against the "Scientist X" accused of slipping atomic secrets to a Red.

The three agents, an authority of the House Unamerican Activities Committee said, will swear they saw Scientist X and Communist Leader Steve Nelson in a wartime conference in Nelseon's home.

"That means," this authority told reporters, "that so far as the Nelson-Scientist X case is concerned it is all locked up on the perjury issues."

The committee has said that the scientist denied knowing Nelson. The scientist worked at the radiation laboratory at the University of California at Berkeley, which handled part of the atom bomb project.

The committee has said in an official report that in March, 1943, the scientist gave Nelson a complicated atomic formula. It called Nelson a Communist espionage agent and described meetings he held with Russian diplomatic officials at which it said documents and money changed hands. The scientist has never been named by the committee.

The committee informant said that the three Federal agents perched in a tree for an hour one night and watched the scientist and Nelson through a window of Nelson's home. He said he didn't know whether they listened in on the conversation.

Representative Velde (R., Ill.), a committee member is spearheading a campaign to wind up the Scientist X case, quizzed one of the prospective witnesses last Sunday. This witness is understood to have tipped Velde as to the other two.

Velde himself is a former FBI agent who worked for a time on the Scientist X case.

Nelson, a naturalized Yugoslav, is now Communist Party organized for western Pennsylvania, with headquarters in Pittsburgh. Early in the war he had a similard job in Alameda County, Calif., which includes Berkeley.

High Anglican

Evangelistic Bishop Sails For America

Bishop Wand

London, Aug. 27 (AP).—The moving force behind the biggest Church of England revival in years set off today for a coast-to-coast tour of America.

He is the Rev. John William Charles Wand, Anglican Bishop of London, who holds that a backslider is where you find him—even if it's in a saloon.

The 64-year-old prelate sailed on the Queen Elizabeth to attend a series of six eucharistic congresses commemorating the fourth centennial of the founding of the English prayer book.

They will be in New York, Cleveland, Chicago, San Francisco, Seattle and Fond-Du-Lac, Wis.

Dr. Wand is a man with modern ideas.

For one thing, he favors athletic sports on Sunday—providing the contestants and spectators come to church, too. He is one of the best customers of his neighborhood movie house.

The methods he used to drum up interest in his big revival last summer were positively American.

They included an advertising campaign and a door-by-door canvass of each parish. He even sent his priests into the saloons to organize community hymn-singing.

On the other hand, Dr. Wand favors a high-church doctrine which calls for religious ceremonies resembling the Roman Catholic mass.

from bodily injury, possibly lynching, only by precautions taken by the Civil Rights Congress and myself."

Patterson declined to tell where Robeson was taken.

Robeson recently returned from a visit to Russia. He was quoted as saying at Paris that Negroes would not fight in a war against Russia.

Thousands of paraders, marching under veterans' groups colors, met head-on with thousands of persons gathering for the concert.

In the fighting that followed at least seven automobiles were turned upside down, and one was tossed off an embankment into a stream.

A cross was seen to be burning atop a hill above the picnic grove.

Several local veteran organizations announced earlier today that they were staging a "patriotic" parade around the picnic grove.

At 6:30 p. m. (EST) the parade started past the grove, located in the nearby town of Cortland.

The parade turned into a dirt road leading to the concert bowl, where 2000 camp chairs had been set up.

Concert goers formed a line across the road and then moved a huge truck across it as a roadblock.

Men and women on both sides were pushed back as the two bodies of persons met, and the concert forces started to sing a Negro spiritual, "We Shall Not Be Moved."

Two county sheriff's men held the surging marchers back for a time, then fell back as pieces of wooden railing from a fence along the road began to fly through the air.

Members of the veterans' parade broke through the woods, overran the concert bowl, and started to rip apart the stage where Robeson was to sing.

They tossed camp chairs through the air and set fire to a pile of them.

Meanwhile road blocks of stone, wood and wire were thrown up on roads leading out of the picnic area.

Cars trying to flee the rioting were stopped and pitched upside down.

Thrown Into Cemetery

One unidentified Negro was reported beaten and thrown over a fence into a nearby cemetery.

Commanders of the veterans' parade shouted orders for the men to disband—but the battling went on.

Some 50 State policemen arrived on the scene later and began to round up the crowd in groups.

At 10 p. m. (11 p. m. EDT) they reported they were beginning to get the thousands of milling persons into hand.

Legionnaires Swarm Into Philadelphia

Philadelphia, Aug. 27 (U.P.).—Horn-tooting legionnaires swarmed into Philadelphia in a gay mood today, serving notice their national convention opening Monday will be the usual combination of serious business and horseplay.

While the monkeyshining "40 and 8" delegations arrived in increasing numbers with their "locomotives" and bells and whistles, convention committees were drawing up the proposals to be submitted to the delegates for action.

Most important of the programs were the national defense recommendations, which will be completed by a special Legion commission Sunday.

The convention actually consists of four meetings in one with the Legion, the Women's Auxiliary, the funmaking "40 and 8" and the women's "8 and 40" holding separate business sessions.

The "8 and 40" honor group of the auxiliary today elected Mrs. Jesse G. Huish, Chicago, new national head.

High spot of the convention will be Monday night, when President Truman addresses the delegates at Convention Hall. Tuesday the legionnaires will hold their annual elaborate 15-hour parade. Election of a new commander will be held Thursday.

Georgia Klan Group Elects Ex-Policeman

Atlanta, Aug. 27 (AP).—Samuel W. Roper, 54, a former head of the Georgia Bureau of Investigation, announced today he has been elected imperial wizard of the Georgia Association of Klans.

He succeeds Dr. Samuel Green, who died recently.

Roper said he first joined the Klan in 1921 but "fell out" until the Association of Georgia Klans was formed after World War II by Green.

He said he had resigned recently as a transfer officer of the State Board of Corrections. He will devote his time to the duties of imperial wizard. Roper is a former Alanta police lieutenant.

"It is my desire and purpose to carry on the fight Dr. Green waged for so many years against un-American influences," he said.

Roper said the Georgia Klans would continue to remain separate from a new Klan organization formed in Montgomery, Ala., last week. Dr. Lycurgus Spinks was chosen to head the new organization. The Georgia association, revived by Dr. Green after World War II, is generally considered the successor to the original Klan.

Bishop Assails Radio Liquor Advertising

By The Associated Press

Bishop Wilbur E. Hammaker of the Methodist Board of Temperance said yesterday that "common decency" should prevent advertising whisky on the radio.

If broadcasters and distillers are "without self-imposed restraints, then it may be necessary for the people, through Government, to take a hand," Bishop Hammaker said in a statement.

The statement said it was reported that Schenley Distillers Co., Inc., has been "negotiating with the broadcasting companies."

Representative Crawford (R., Mich.) last Wednesday introduced a bill to prevent radio and television ads for liquor, wines and malt beverages. Crawford said he acted because of reports that the Schenley firm is "studying the possibility of using radio for advertising."

Bishop Hammaker called attention to a letter of Senator Johnson (D., Colo.), chairman of the Senate Commerce Committee, last month attacking what Johnson called a plan of "certain large distillers" to advertise whisky on the radio.

Nice, France, Aug. 27 (U.P.).—Winston Churchill's cold is so much better that he played cards until 11 o'clock last night, members of his staff said today.

Los Angeles Gangster Held In N.J. Slaying

Los Angeles, Aug. 27 (U.P.).—Harold (Happy) Meltzer, one of Mickey Cohen's "boys," was arrested today on suspicion of murder in connection with the slaying of a New York racketeer, Charley Yanoski, last year.

Yanoski, once tabbed by the FBI as "one of the most dangerous criminals in the East," was stabbed to death on July 18, 1948, in Clifton, N. J.

Meltzer was the second Cohen hoodlum picked up.

Police Capt. Paul Dittrich said the Yanowski slaying was committed in revenge. The victim, a convicted bank robber, was a business agent for the International Longshoremen's Union and police said he had been marked for killing for years.

Men in Minority, as War Wives Charter Plane From California

New York, Aug. 27 (AP).—A chartered Trans-Ocean DC-4 airliner carrying 83 persons, including 44 war wives and 28 children, took off for London today after a hectic and noisy flight from Oakland, Calif.

The plane was crammed with people and paraphernalia. Twelve children under two years old rode in bassinettes strung from the ceiling. Other youngsters sat in their mother's laps.

They were bound for a European vacation.

"Operation Bib and Diaper" was organized by the Britannia Club, for brides of World Wars I and II. The plane was scheduled to arrive at London at 2:30 p. m. Sunday (London time).

The brides, all from the San Francisco Bay area, chartered the airliner, and it was converted into a combination nursery and soup kitchen for the trip. The brides paid $550 each for the round trip and $150 for each child over two.

The plane carried a crew of six, three paying passengers and two nonrevenue company employes. The regular stewardess failed to show up.

Trans-Ocean Airlines officials said gross weight was 67,746 pounds. The maximum permitted is 70,000 pounds.

The horde of women and children who poured from the plane at New York International Airport this morning threw the field into a state of chaos. The men were bedraggled and speechless. The mothers were exhausted.

GI Insurance Forms For Rebates Ready

Application blanks for the 2.8 billion dollar GI insurance refund will be available Monday at postoffices, veterans' organizations, Veteranss Administration offices, and Red Cross chapters.

Some 16 million World War II veterans who hold or have held National Service Life Insurance for three months or more will share in the dividend. Payments will begin in January, 1950, with VA planning to mail 200,000 checks daily until the job is done.

A VA spokesman disclosed yesterday that the 2.8 billion dollar refund represents about 70 per cent of the total premiums paid from issuance of the first policy in October, 1940, to the end of 1948. Individual dividends will be computed from the date the policy was issued to its anniversary date in 1948.

Formula Experimental

The amount each veteran will receive is based on the face value of his policy, the length of time he kept it in force, and his age when he took it out.

VA is experimenting with a formula by which individual refunds are to be determined. The formula has not been finally approved. Other factors being equal, the largest refunds will go to men who were youngest when they took out their insurance.

The spokesman said the dividend will not be a percentage of the amount of premiums an individual has paid. It will be based on the contribution of his age group to the $2.8 billion surplus.

The application form is a three-part card. One part carries instructions which the applicant tears off and keeps.

Form Contains 9 Spaces

Applcants must fill in and sign the middle part. It contains nine spaces:

1. Full name, typed or printed; 2. complete mailing address; 3. county; 4. service serial number or numbers; 5. branch of service; 6. birth date; 7. insurance number (desireable but not essential if all other information is supplied); 8. VA claim number (if the veteran has one); 9. signature. On the reverse side, the applicant fills in his return address.

On the third part, the applicant prints his name and address. Then he folds the two parts of the form, affixes a one-cent stamp, and mails it to VA. (The card is self-addressed).

GI Dividend Blanks Available on Monday

Baltimore, Aug. 27 (AP).—Application blanks for GI insurance dividends will be available Monday at postoffices, veterans' organizations and Red Cross units.

It is estimated that about 250,000 Maryland World War II veterans are eligible for the dividends which are to be paid early next year.

The $2,800,000,000 dividend is to come from National Service Life Insurance surplus funds which have accumulated since 1940. The Veterans Administration estimates that individual payments will range from a few dollars to $400 in some cases.

Rights Bill For Europe Prepared

Strasbourg, France, Aug. 27 (AP). A committee of the Consultative Assembly announced today it had drawn up an 11-point bill of rights for Europeans.

The proposal is to be taken up by the assembly of 101 delegates during the coming week. If approved, the 12 member nations of the Council of Europe will be observed.

Meanwhile, the general affairs committee agreed to draw up a plan by next April 30 for the political union of Europe.

The members of this committee also are preparing a plan for a general steering committee which would hold the reins of assembly work between sessions and press the member nations to act on assembly projects.

One member of the committee said this plan was "the cornerstone of a future government of Europe."

The 11-point bill of rights includes:

Security of person; freedom from arbitrary arrest, detention or exile; freedom from slavery, servitude or discriminatory forced labor; freedom of speech and expression of opinion; freedom of religious belief, practice and teaching; freedom of association; protection of the natural rights associated with marriage, paternity and family; inviolability of the home; equality before the law; freedom from discrimination because of race, religion, national origin, sex and political or other opinion; freedom from arbitrary confiscation of property.

Population Gain Called World Asset

Lake Success, Aug. 27 (AP).—A Dutch colonial official contends that more population will be a world asset and that resources development can be geared up to feed, clothe and shelter additional millions in peace.

The optimism was voiced by Egbert de Vries of the Netherlands Ministry of Overseas Territories while he was presiding over a session of the United Nations Scientific Conferences yesterday.

The plenary meeting was devoted to technical discussion on how production may be made to balance with the needs of a rising world population.

Stephen Raushenbush, consultant of the United States Interior Department, discussed alternative resource uses, conservation in a competitive economy, conservation and peace, and factors in economic growth in underdeveloped areas.

Harvard Prof. John D. Black challenged some of Raushenbush's theories as "controlled economy" and advocated encouragement of capitalist enterprise to accomplish the balance between population and production.

Actuaries figure the world population will rise from the present two billion to three billion by the year 2000.

The Right Rev. Dr. M. M. Coady of St. Francis Xavier University, Antigonish, Nova Scotia, told the conference the problem of feeding increased population could best be met by introducing modern ways of production in backward areas.

Chairman De Vries summed up, saying:

"People are an asset, a natural resource, and not a liability. We must use our resources in a wise way for optimum production. Humanity has the right, the duty and the privilege of having faith in the future. If we don't forget the lessons of the past and if we have confidence in the develpments to come, we can solve our problems."

Contracts Awarded For Maryland Road Building

Baltimore, Aug. 27 (AP).—The State Roads Commission disclosed today it had let another $2,441,098 in contracts as a part of its $40,000,000 highway improvement program for 1949.

The list included:

A 3.7 mile bypass of Laurel on the Washington-Baltimore Boulevard to relieve congestion on the heavily travelled road, Williams Construction Company for $604,665.

Reconstruction of a 5.8 mile section of the La Plata-Indian Head road in Charles County, F. P. Asher, jr., and Sons of Annapolis, $398,254.

Building of a pedestrian tunnel under the Baltimore & Ohio railroad tracks in Bethesda, Leo Butler Co., Silver Spring, $31,103.

Airline May Cut Cumberland Service.

Cumberland, Md., Aug. 27 (AP).—All-American Airways said today it may have to curtail its Cumberland service in the winter months due to the lack of landing aids.

In a letter to the Cumberland Municipal Airport Commission, H. R. Bazley of Pittsburgh, line vice president, pointed out that daylight time will soon be ending and that the company will not be able to make stops on one or two of its flights.

Bazley said obstruction lights are needed if night landings are to be allowed by the CAA. The port has regular field lights. The company also says that a radio facility is essential. The obstruction lights are needed to mark hills on approaches to the field.

Stamp Asked Honoring Confederate Veterans

Twenty-three Democratic Senators have asked the Post Office Department to issue a commemorative stamp in honor of Confederate Veterans of the Civil War, it was announced yesterday.

Senator Stennis (D., Miss.) said the Senators had urged that the stamp be issued after the one to be released next week in honor of the Grand Army of the Republic.

Lucas Assails Plan to Order Cuts in Budget

and only Friday the Senate refused, in the armed service appropriation bill, to vote money for 58 groups for which the House had voted funds. It cut the appropriation back to 48 groups, the present authorized strength and that favored by the Administration, which the House had overruled.

Lucas acknowledged the demands for governmental economy coming from Illinois and other States, but reiterated his position that Congress should make its own cuts in Federal spending and not delegate this power to the President.

The leader's freshman Democratic colleague from Illinois, Senator Paul H. Douglas, earlier regarded as a staunch New Dealer, broke with Lucas on this issue.

Douglas announced that if the Senate fails to slash another 275 million dollars from the bill under a plan he is sponsoring, he will "reluctantly" vote for the coalition plan, even though he believes it is not "a proper method" and that "Congress should have the courage to make the reductions itself."

Another Administration Senator went off the reservation yesterday on a different tangent. Senator Herbert R. O'Conor of Maryland announced support of immediate repeal of wartime excise taxes and possibly income tax relief in the lower brackets. On the excise tax proposal, O'Conor joined an increasing number of Democrats who oppose the Administration stand against repeal, which businessmen are demanding as a stimulus to business.

Support for Defense Secretary Johnson's order to drop 135,000 civilians and 12,073 officers from military payrolls came yesterday from the Chamber of Commerce of the United States, which announced it was asking its 2500 local chambers to write President Truman and Johnson indorsing the cut and demanding additional ones.

Senator John L. McClellan (D., Ark.) sponsor of the coalition amendment to force the President to cut spending, was not claiming victory for it, as he conceded the loss of a few Senators who previously backed the plan.

However, he said he expected to pick up four to six votes not previously lined up for the plan and thought there was a good chance for it if absenteeism is not too heavy Monday.

Senator Taft (R., Ohio) predicted the plan would easily command more than a majority, but was not certain it would enlist the necessary two-thirds vote.

Senator Douglas Urges $2,500,000,444 Cut

Chautauqua, N. Y., Aug. 27 (AP).—U. S. Senator Douglas (D., Ill.) today urged a $2,500,000,000 cut in the Federal budget.

The former economics professor said reducing Government waste and cutting the budget "would decrease the deficit and increase public faith in the stability of our finances."

In a speech at the Chautauqua Institute, Douglas denied that the United States is in a depression, but rather "a business recession." He said:

"Fortunately we have several safeguards that we did not have in 1929, which should prevent a breakdown."

As an antidote to a rise in unemployment, Douglas recommended expansion of public works and a cut in excise taxes as a stimulant to private business.

Egg Support Halt Urged By Brannan .

By the United Press

Secretary of Agriculture Brannan has privately warned congressional Democratic farm leaders that if Congress continues the present price support program, the Government will be swamped with eggs next year.

Brannan said this would cost the Government between 150 million and 200 million dollars.

The warning, it was revealed yesterday, was contained in a letter Brannan sent August 6 to Chairman Thomas (D., Okla.) of the Senate Agriculture Committee and Chairman Cooley (D., N. C.) of the House Agriculture Committee.

Says "It Would Be Tragic"

Brannan said "it would be tragic" if Congress should enact the House-passed bill to extend the present support law another year. This law requires the Government to support farm prices at 90 per cent of parity through purchases.

Brannan said the Government, as a result of purchases required under this program, would have 100 million dollars worth of eggs in its price support stockpile before the end of this year. These stocks will include eggs left over from last year's purchases. There is no market outlet in sight for these eggs, Brannan declared.

Prospects "Discouraging"

"As serious as this is, the prospects for the year ahead are still discouraging," he said.

Because of prospective production increases, Brannan estimated the Government would have to add another 150 million dollars to 200 million dollars worth of eggs to this stockpile next year to keep farm prices at 90 per cent of parity.

Brannan wrote the letter in response to an inquiry by Thomas as to why the Government could not resell its price support eggs in selected areas to bring down the cost of eggs to city consumers.

Gottwald Blames Foreign Tories

Banska Bystrica, Czechoslovakia, Aug. 27 (AP).—Klement Gottwald, Communist president, today charged that foreign reactionaries were stirring up Slovak Catholics against his government.

He asserted home-grown reactionaries had been "driven into their holes and to the devil" before they were reinvigorated from abroad by a shameful abuse of "the feelings of the sincere Slovak faithful."

Gottwald spoke briefly at the small town of Topolcianky in Slovakia as he began a tour in the three-day celebration of the fifth anniversary of the Slovak uprising against the Nazis. He is to make a major address at Zvolen Sunday.

His tour is in the strongly Catholic province where the nation's church-state conflict has been the most heated.

The three-day celebration was opened formally at Banska Bystrica with an address of Oldrich John, speaker of parliament, who declared "we shall remain loyal forever to Soviet Russia" and asserted that Josef Stalin was not only the leader of the Soviet Union "but also our leader."

Both Banska Bystrica and Topolcianky were heavily guarded by soldiers and police.

In another speech at Podbrezove, Slovakia, Rudolf Slansky, secretary general of the Czechoslovak Communist Party, charged that the "reactionary church hierarchy" and Marshal Tito were in league with the "Western warmongers."

"We will not tolerate interference in our country's internal affairs—either from the Vatican or Anglo-American agents.

"As for the traitor Tito, he will be expelled sooner or later by the Yugoslav people themselves."

Boy's Words Help Mother Win Custody

Gone 8 Weeks

Pair Seeks Mother of Little Ward

Although Mr. and Mrs. R. E. Schmitz love tiny Sherry Bean very much, and would like to keep her, they have been forced to call on District welfare authorities to help find the child's mother.

The Schmitzes, who live at 3310 Oberon st., Kensington, Md., have been caring for the 10-month-old girl for seven weeks, ever since they agreed to aid a Falls Church woman with whom Sherry was left by her mother July 3, Mrs. Schmitz said.

The Falls Church woman, a friend of the Schmitzs, attempted to locate the child's mother, a Mrs. Dorothy Bean, to get heavier clothes for the baby after she had been with her a few days, Mrs. Schmitz explained, but Mrs. Bean was reported unknown at the address she had given.

One week's board was paid by the mother. At the end of the week, the Falls Church woman, who is not well, asked Mrs. Schmitz to take Sherry until the mother could be found. The Schmitzs, who have two children of their own, have cared for the child since, but find the expense a bit heavy, Mrs. Schmitz explained.

Although the couple would like to keep Sherry, a permanent, happy home for the baby is their main concern, Mrs. Schmitz said.

The big wish of eight-year-John Walter Carney, r came ture yesterday at District Court.

In a habeas corpus tion, udge Edward M. Curran awarded the boy to his mother, Mrs. Margaret Poe Carney King, 30, of the Town House Apartments. It may have been little John's statement that clinched the decision.

"Who do you want to live with?" the jurist asked the boy.

"My mother, that's who," John replied.

Virginia Decree Overruled

Then the judge acted in accordance with the boy's wish, despite a Virginia court decree of four years ago which gave John to his father, John Walter Carney of Cincinnati.

Testimony brought out that when the child was 10 months old his parents separated. He lived with his paternal great-grandmother and grandmother in Pulaski, Va., even after his fath got the divorce on grounds of desertion.

Since then, John's parents have made new marriages. The father is in training for an engineering job with an Ohio concern. The mother is married to Dr. Dudley T. King, a $10,000-a-year dentist here.

The father charged Mrs. King took the boy from Virginia recently and refused to return him.

Accusations Exchanged

In court Carney charged that his former wife was unfaithful during their marriage. She denied it. She, in turn, charged him with having been a drunkard. He said he is now a member of Alcoholics Anonymous. He admitted having separated from his second wife, but said they have come together again.

Next to testify was Mrs. W. W. Carson of Pulaski, the boy's paternal 84-year-old great-grandmother.

"I don't like to go back over the various times my grandson has broken my heart," she said, and then went on to describe why she didn't want him to have little John.

"When a person assumes the responsibility of a child, he should have a definite and settled home," she testified. "I can't say that my grandson has it."

"I'm Sorry to Say Not"

She was asked, "Don't you think your grandson and his wife can supply little John with a good home?"

"I'm sorry to say not," she replied.

Judge Curran ruled that since the child was in the District, the court would take jurisdiction. He said he was not bound to abide by the ruling of the divorce court, but only to take its decree as evidence of the marital situation at that time.

"I have the duty to protect the child and without regard to what another court has done previously. I find as a fact that the circumstances are not now the same and that the child's present welfare demands that the custody be awarded to the mother," he said.

Bloodmobile To Visit Three Nearby Areas

Three visits in nearby areas are scheduled this week for the Red Cross Bloodmobile.

Monday, the blood collection unit will be stationed at the First Baptist Church Clarendon, Arlington County, from 10 a. m. to 4 p. m. to receive donations.

During the same hours on Tuesday the unit will be located at the National Catholic Community Services Club, 115 N. Washington st., Alexandria. Thursday, the bloodmobile will visit Maryland Park High School, Seat Pleasant, from noon to 6 p. m.

A total of 488 pints of blood was distributed by the Red Cross Washington Regional Blood Center to hospitals throughout the area. Included were 304 pints for District hospitals, 89 for those in Maryland, 57 for Virginia institutions and 38 for West Virginia.

D. C. Air Guard Unit Returns From Camp

The District's own 121st (White House) Squadron returned yesterday after 15 days' encampment at New Castle (Del.) Airport for annual Air National Guard maneuvers.

The ground convoy pulled into Andrews Field at 1:30 p. m., concluding a 3½-hour motor trip. Utility planes landed at about the same time, after a 30-minute flight.

The fighter elements flew home Friday.

During the encampment the 121st flew a total of 1200 hours, Lieut. Col. W. W. Millikan, commanding officer, reported. Of these 700 were rolled up by the F-47 Thunderbolts, the remainder by utility planes.

The planes consumed some 83,000 gallons of gasoline, and about 40,000 rounds of 50-caliber ammunition were expended.

Ground crews of the White House Squadron maintained a record of 98 per cent of the total planes in commission for flight over the 15-day period. An average of 60 plane missions were flown daily.

Home Mishaps Kill 4, Hurt 28

Falls last week were once again the great nemesis in Washington homes, the District Red Cross Accident Prevention Service reports.

The week's survey reveals that 4 persons died as a result of falls and 28 were treated at hospitals for injuries due to the same type of accident.

Overall 63 persons needed hospital treatment for home accident injuries. Two persons were burned to death and two infants were suffocated.

As usual, bizarre culinary explorations by the kiddies caused considerable stomach aches. Children tasted of epsom salts, tar, insecticide, roach powder, and lysol among other things. One little girl tippled a full bottle of laxative.

Kansas Federal Court Divisions Eliminated

President Truman yesterday signed a bill discontinuing divisions of the Federal District Court in Kansas.

It abolishes the present three divisions and adds Dodge City as an additional place for holding court. Sessions are now permitted at Kansas City, Leavenworth, Topeka, Hutchinson, Wichita and Fort Scott.

Construction Permits Here Show Decline

A substantial decrease in permits granted for construction of houses and apartments in Washington during the fiscal year ended June 30 was reported yesterday.

B. H. Benson, superintendent of the District Central Permit Bureau, in his annual report, noted that 910 permits were granted for dwellings and 1937 for apartment structures during fiscal 1949. In 1948, the total was 1447 for dwellings and 815 for apartments.

Trend Reversed in July

On Friday, the Bureau of Labor Statistics showed an opposite trend for July, reporting the biggest home-building month on record for Greater Washington. A total of 6210 dwelling units were started during the month. (The BLS counted units in apartment houses.)

Benson's report showed permits for business buildings declined from 148 to 143, while garage permits rose from 14,771 to 17,299.

Building activity was concentrated, as in previous years, in the Northwest section with the Southeast, Northeast and Southwest following in that order.

Figures Broken Down

In all, a total of 19,527 structures were authorized with a value of $60,087,168. The breakdown includes these brick buildings: Dwelling, 891; apartments, 197; garages, 123; offices, 10; dormitories, 4. Frame buildings included 19 dwellings and 34 garages.

Among the dwelling permits, 489 were for detached structures, 315 for semidetached ones, 93 for community houses, and 13 for row buildings.

Benson recommended assignment of liaison personnel from the Health Department and Smoke and Boiler Division to expedite handling of permits.

10th Annual Recreation Day Parade Held by Playgrounds

The Washington Post

Barbara Ann Magruder, 9, of 2432 N st. nw., receives The Washington Post trophy from Mrs. Rosina Tucker, vice president of the Federation of Civic Associations

Children from five District playgrounds yesterday took part in the tenth annual "Recreation Day" activities at Briggs-Montgomery School, 27th st. nw. between I and K sts.

A parade which began at 1 p. m. at 24th and N sts. nw. led off the festivities. At conclusion of the parade, at Briggs-Montgomery School, trophies were awarded winners of the best float, marching unit and exhibit contests.

The Washington Post Trophy, a large loving cup, went to Francis Recreation Center for its second-place float. The cup was accepted for the center by 9-year-old Barbara Ann Magruder of 2432 N st. nw., from Mrs. Rosina Tucker, vice president of the Federation of Civic Associations.

Briggs-Montgomery playground was judged winner of the marching unit and best float contests. Its prizewinning float, donated by the Evening Star, depicted the Wedding of the Painted Doll. Elsie May Garner, 7, of 2618 I st. nw., and Wayne Jackson, 5, of 930 26th st. nw.—the bride and groom—received the trophy.

The playground's trophy for its marching unit was given by the Times-Herald.

The exhibit trophy went to Morgan playground. Gift of the Washington Daily News, it was received by Carol Parker, 9, of 2111 18th st. nw.

Snow's Court playground took second place in the marching unit competition. The trophy was donated by Woodward & Norris Real Estate firm.

The parade and presentation of trophies were followed by a program of games, dances and special displays put on by each playground. "Recreation Day" was sponsored by the Lincoln Civic Association.

Indicted D. C. Gambler Shot At Bladensburg Night Club

A predawn shooting and knifing involving an indicted gambler and a former convict came to light yesterday, more than 36 hours after it occurred outside a Bladensburg (Md.) night club.

Two men were hospitalized and one man is being sought by Prince Georges County Police, who started their investigation late yesterday. The shooting and knifing occurred early Friday morning near the Crossroads Restaurant.

Bernard Del-Negro, 37, of 2428 Tunlaw rd. nw., is in Prince Georges County Hospital with bullet wounds in both legs. Del-Negro is one of 34 men indicted last spring by U. S. Attorney George Morris Fay's special gambling grand jury. With William "Snags" Lewis, Del-Negro was charged with operating and promoting a numbers lottery.

Samuel Ochs, clothing merchant, 3145 M st. nw., was treated and released at Sibley Hospital early Friday for "cuts" suffered during the fracas. Ochs described the evening as "a friendly little misunderstanding between old friends."

County police were looking for a 38-year-old Washington man, whom, police said, Ochs described as his assailant.

The man sought has served time in Lorton Reformatory, having been sentenced to three to six years in connection with the fatal shooting of a local gambler in 1933. He also was sentenced to one year and nine months in March of 1948 for the beating of his former sweetheart.

Mystery surrounded the shooting and knifing, which went unreported by police for almost two days. Bladensburg Chief of Police Henry J. Nebel said the disturbance resulted from an argument in which a woman was slapped.

Nebel said he is investigating the connections, if any, between the shooting and knifing.

Both occurred at 3:30 a. m. as a large group got ready to move to a Washington after-hours club. Del-Negro has insisted he cannot identify his assailant. Although Ochs did identify the man who knifed him, he told police he did not want to prosecute.

The case was first investigated by a county police officer, James H. Burgess, whose father, Henry, holds the liquor license for the restaurant. Burgess said yesterday he reported the shooting to his superiors as soon as he got off duty, five hours after it occurred.

He said Del-Negro told him this story: Del-Negro and Lloyd Thomas, also of the Tunlaw rd. address, were driving by the Crossroads when their car developed engine trouble. He and Thomas pulled up by the restaurant, got out of the car and were investigating the motor under the hood when Del-Negro fell to the ground, crying "I've been shot." He said the bullet apparently came from some nearby shrubbery.

Burgess said in his report he found no cartridge after a thorough search, and no slug, although both of Del-Negro's legs had been pierced.

286 Expected to Die In Holiday Accidents

By V. R. Montanari
Post Reporter

Death will take no holiday on the coming Labor Day weekend.

Safety officials believe about 286 people will be killed in highway accidents and about 10,000 injured.

They expect no less than 59 drownings and 53 other "miscellaneous" accidental deaths.

The figures are from last year's Labor Day weekend Associated Press survey, and the National Safety Council foresees an equal toll this year.

Washington won the 1948 National Safety Council's grand award for traffic safety among 1128 cities last year. But there were 114 traffic accidents between 5 p. m. Friday and 8 a. m. Tuesday, according to the police traffic division and the Department of Vehicles and Traffic.

One result was 51 injuries. While fatal collisions "didn't happen here"—that is, within the District—five Washington residents met death on the highways of Virginia, Maryland and Pennsylvania during the weekend. However, Labor Day traffic accidents in the District killed two in 1946 and one in 1947.

The waters of the Potomac last year claimed one victim—a man of 22 who had gone out with two friends on an afternoon canoe outing, and fell overboard.

The National Safety Council estimates that about 33 million cars will be on the road next weekend, a peak figure. They will travel about 4 billion miles, the council figures.

These motorists, according to the traditional pattern, will include millions of holiday seekers, and millions of returning vacationers as well. A large proportion of the latter will be bringing children home for school openings.

"A man with a family knows there is more at stake than a dented fender," said George R. Hammond, safety and education director of the American Automobile Association's D. C. Division, in an appeal for caution on the road next weekend.

The AAA official urged motorists to observe these precautionary rules:

Don't speed. Respect stop signs and traffic lights. Don't weave in and out of traffic lanes, or cross double white lines on the highway. Don't drive while fatigued, drowsy or under the influence. Get an early start in the mornings before heat ruffles your temper and bumper-to-bumper traffic makes it necessary to race in "starts and spurts."

The Keystone Automobile Club adds that the motorist who "flits gaily at 15 miles an hour in a 45- or 50-mile zone" is not an addition to the safety of the road.

By impeding traffic, such a driver creates congestion and accident hazards, according to Ernest Brett, Keystone manager. A motorist who wants to dawdle along and take in the beauties of nature should choose lightly traveled roads, he believes.

People using boats should know how to swim or at least have someone with them who knows lifesaving, warns the safety services division of the D. C. Chapter, American Red Cross. Life preservers should be along, too, the division advises.

If you tip over while boating, hang on to your boat, Safety Serv- advises. Ninety-nine per cent of craft will float because of air caught underneath them, and metal ones have air tanks.

Leonard warns against boating in the Potomac rapids, particularly those near Little Falls. Several persons have lost their lives there in recent years.

As for swimming, the danger areas here in such stretches of the Potomac as the Georgetown Channel and in Kingman Lake, along the Anacostia River. If you're not a competent swimmer and have no companion, it's better to keep away from the rivers and stick to supervised swimming pools, Leonard says. No one has drowned in an attended District pool in more than 30 years.

Other Red Cross water rules are: Don't swim when overheated or cold, choose bathing places carefully and don't dive in unknown waters; don't overestimate your swimming or lifesaving ability, and heed warnings of fatigue or immersion; keep your head in all situations, and if caught in weeds, don't fight violently, but clear yourself by gentle shaking and drawing movements.

And don't forget other indirect water hazards—sea nettles, sunburn and strokes, sharp barnacles and other shellfish, and people pushing or ducking each other.

Whether the holiday had anything to do with it or not, the Red Cross noted that the home accidents reported last year during Labor Day week rose considerably. Some 142 victims of home mishaps were treated at District hospitals, compared to an average of 110.

They ranged from five older people who died from falls, to a 4-year-old boy who lost a finger in a lawnmower and another who suffered a watermelon seed lodged in his nose.

Taxes Spur D.C.'s Building

tax, or about $13,500,000 for a full year. They also look for seasonal fluctuations, with spring and summer showing higher figures.

The cigarette tax income is listed by the budget office at $65,000 to $70,000 a month or $800,000 a year.

Tax Collector Guy W. Pearson, who handles the sale of cigarette tax stamps, reported yesterday sale of $93,564 worth during July, the month before the tax went into effect, and $98,131 in August up to Tuesday. He predicted the August sale would go well above $100,000.

In his opinion, the annual take on cigarette stamps will run between a million and $1,200,000 a year.

Pleased by Tax Picture

Commissioner Mason obviously was pleased by the tax outlook.

"We want to keep this city on a pay-as-you-go basis and avoid borrowing money," he commented.

He said in some cases only money for plans will be psent now for projects covering actual building operations in 1951, 1952, and 1953. Some of these buildings will be part of Brig. Gen. Gordon R. Young's six-year development program for the city, he added.

In his own departments, Commissioner Mason said he would concentrate on building a new Home for the Aged to replace present substandard structures, and erection of a new Children's Center, possibly near Laurel, Md., where the city has land holdings. The latter would replace several inadequate District children's institutions, Mason explained.

Tax Staff Canvassing Dealers in Cigarettes

Twelve members of the District tax collector's staff are checking all business establishments licensed to sell cigarettes.

The group is divided into pairs, and hopes to complete the inspections by Labor Day, Tax Collector Guy W. Pearson said yesterday. About 3200 retailers have been licensed, in addition to 24 wholesalers and distributors.

The program is one of "education and persuasion," with no one taken to court as yet, Pearson said. A few "small stores" were found selling cigarettes without the new tax stamps, but this was a misunderstanding, and was quickly remedied, Pearson stated.

A regulation is now being drafted requiring wholesalers and distributors to file reports within the first 10 days of each month listing stocks of unstamped cigarettes. This will aid tax officials in checking on sales.

A new demand for stamps for use on fifties and hundreds has developed as cigarette manufacturers resume production of the large packages for the Christmas trade. Such production was virtually halted during the war for lack of metal containers, Pearson explained.

Tobin Appoints Three to Federal Chest Unit Posts

Three top posts in the Federal Government Unit of the 1950 Community Chest Federation Campaign have been filled by Secretary of Labor Maurice J. Tobin, Government chairman.

Appointments announced yesterday by Secretary Tobin were: John S. Graham, Assistant Secretary of the Treasury, to be vice chairman of the Government Unit.

Mrs. Georgia Neese Clark, Treasurer of the United States, to head the Red Feather Campaign in the Treasury Department.

Harley Hise, chairman of the board of directors of the Reconstruction Finance Corporation, to be campaign chairman for that agency.

Atomic Defense Course Started By Air Force

San Antonio, Tex., Aug. 27 (U.P.). Fourteen GI's were enrolled today in the first class in a school offering a course in atomic defense.

The course is being conducted at the School of Aviation Medicine at Randolph Air Force Base by Lieut. Col. John M. Talbot, chief of the department of biophysics, and Maj. John E. Pickering, assistant chief.

When the first class is graduated next Wednesday, another group of 14 enlisted men will study the use of film badges and special pocket meters which show how radioactive substance has bombarded the bearer. Four more additional classes will be conducted before the end of April. Students also will be schooled in the use of Geiger counters and ion chambers to determine locations and intensities of radioactivity.

D. C. Gals Get Whack At Male Drivers

Women have been talking about men drivers since the day Henry Ford disrupted carriage traffic in Detroit; and men have been talking about women drivers for almost as long.

The Los Angeles Mirror summed up the case against women drivers in a recent series The Washington Post felt its readers should see.

But The Post has also given three noted Washington women an opportunity to speak for their sex. The men drivers' vs. women drivers series will begin in the Washington Post Monday.

AVC Chapter Attacks State Veteran Office

Baltimore, Aug. 27 (AP).—The Baltimore chapter of the American Veterans Committee urged Governor Lane today to abolish the Maryland Veterans Commission.

In a letter to Lane, officials of the chapter termed the State commission "a branch office" of an American Legion political faction.

During the Legion convention here last week, a threatened move to submit a resolution calling for discontinuance of the commission failed to materialize.

Leaders of the Legion faction that unsuccessfully opposed the election of Kenneth R. Hammer as State commander had considered submitting such a resolution.

Richard C. Manning, State service officer of the Veteran's commission, was Hammer's campaign manager.

The AVC statement to Lane said:

"Not the least of our objections to the commission is the fact that (its) employes have repeatedly mixed State business with American Legion politics."

Yugoslavs Charge Foes Try to Carve Up Area

Belgrade, Yugoslavia, Aug. 27 (AP). Yugoslavs charged today that Romania and other Cominform states are designing to carve up this country and annex parts of it to their own territory.

The charges were aired in the newspaper Borba, Communist mouthpiece of Premier Marshal Tito's government. It said Romania is trying to grab the rich wheat and corn district of Banat.

was confirmed tonight by Yugoslav Ministry of Transport officials.

The ship appeared at Kladovo only four hours after the Soviet Union had presented its note to the Yugoslav government denouncing the regime of Marshal Tito as an "enemy and a foe" of Russia.

Yugoslav frontier guards signaled the monitor, demanding that she heave to and submit to an examination by Yugoslav river authorities in accordance with the Danube code adopted.

The signals were ignored, as were repeated signals, transport officials said. They said the guards were careful, however, not to give the Russians the slightest excuse to precipitate an incident.

Both trips took the Soviet warship through the northeast corner of Yugoslavia.

Official sources said the ship was "carefully and continually" observed by Yugoslav armed forces on the two-day voyage from Romania to Hungary.

Yesterday, the ship suddenly reappeared at the Hungarian frontier town of Bezdan and returned down river, ignoring Yugoslav demands that it halt both at Bezdan and Kladova.

The ship passed Kladovo and sailed back into Romanian territory late yesterday.

Seizure Law Bars Peace, Bridges Says

Honolulu, Aug. 27 (U.P.)—CIO Longshore Chief Harry Bridges said today that any hope for wage bargaining in the four-month-old Hawaiian dock strike is "almost nonexistent" unless the Territory discards its dock seizure law.

"I didn't come to Honolulu to negotiate with the employers," said the president of the International Longshoremen's and Warehousemen's Union. He arrived by air last night from a week's trip to the mainland, where he conferred with his lieutenants in San Francisco headquarters.

He criticized the law setting up government control of the islands' stevedoring operations and said it "weights the strike in favor of the employers."

"We might possibly make one last desperate effort to get somewhere in the negotiations while I am here," he said. "But if a meeting is held we could tell the employers our position in a very short time."

Joint Session Asked

Federal Conciliation Commissioner George Hillenbrand has asked for a joint bargaining session next week.

Bridges told a press conference that the restraining order now sought by union attorneys in Federal Court to cancel the seizure law "would settle the strike." He said employers would be forced to "settle in a hurry."

With the law favoring the employers through allowing them to get nearly normal profits, he said, "we would be in an unequal position across the bargaining table and negotiating now in Honolulu would be a waste of time.

"We are not going into an unequal contest. There'll only be real bargaining when the thing is evening up."

Employers "Afraid," He Says

Bridges charged that employers are "afraid" of negotiations in Washington with Federal Conciliation Chief Cyrus Ching. But, he said, "I'll try to get them to okay Ching's invitation." Ching agreed to hear the dispute in Washington, D. C., but refused to make a trip to the islands, pleading the press of other important potential labor disruptions in the East.

"The strike's too heavy now for the person of Hillenbrand's weight," Bridges said, adding that "I don't want to impugn his ability, but the strike is too big."

As Bridges talked to the press, arguments in Federal court on the union petition for a restraining order against the seizure law ended and Judges J. Frank McLaughlin and Delbert E. Metzger announced they would take the case under advisement during the weekend and announce their decision Monday.

D.C. Quarantine Rules Modified

District Health Department has modified its regulations governing the quarantine periods for some communicable diseases, Dr. Daniel L. Seckinger, acting health officer, revealed yesterday.

He said recent discoveries that many communicable diseases are most readily transmitted at the outset of the ailment led to the changes.

The restriction time for chicken pox cases has been reduced from "10 days and until all scabs are removed" to "7 days following the appearance of the eruption," the Health Department announced.

The exclusion from school of "contacts of measles" has been eliminated and now the brothers and sisters of measle sufferers may continue with their school work.

The isolation period of mumps has been reduced from "10 days or until the swelling has subsided" to "5 days after the appearance of the swelling."

The isolation period of the epidemic form of meningitis has been reduced from 14 days to 3 days after the patient receives sulfonamide treatment.

The isolation period of scarlet fever cases has been reduced from 14 days to 7 days. There will be no restriction of household contact sover the age of 15 years, provided they are not giving nursing care to the patient.

Ringworm is now included as a reportable disease.

A Health Department spokesman said the changes were made to bring the local department into line with the practices of the American Public Health Association.

Lost Boy Still Sought

McGregor, Minn., Aug. 27 (AP). A final swing through a wide area already covered was started today by 100 determined searchers trying to learn the fate of Larry Coleman, 3, who vanished in the wilderness a week ago. Not a single trace has been found.

Senate Votes Laboratory For Missiles

A $1,900,000 Bureau of Standards guided-missile research laboratory was authorized by the Senate yesterday, but it probably will not be built in Washington.

Senator Johnson (D., Colo.) told the Senate the location of the new laborato., has not been determined but that it probably will be outside Washington "for security reasons." The bill would allow the bureau to choose the location.

The laboratory is part of an extensive military guided-missile program in which the bureau already has developed the successful missile known as the Bat. Of the total estimated cost, $1,340,000 would be for construction and the rest for air conditioning, lighting, roads, furniture, and so forth.

The bill now goes to the House.

Third Deafmute Hurt After Two Are Killed

Barbourville, Ky., Aug. 27 (AP). Fanny Smith, deaf mute daughter of Dole Smith of nearby Fount, was critically injured today when struck by a freight train while walking along the right-of-way.

Two years ago her brother, Robert, also a deafmute, was killed by a train in the same vicinity. Another brother, Otis, also a deafmute, was killed by a hit-run driver.

Middle East Survey Shifts Accent to Economic Side

Appointment of Gordon Clapp to conduct a United Nations economic survery of the Middle East was significant not only in its projection of "Point Four" policy but in its transfer of emphasis to economic rather than political problems, State Department officials said yesterday.

Clapp, chairman of the board of TVA, was named by U. N. Secretary General Trygve Lie to head the survey which was proposed by the United States. It has support of both the Israel and Arab governments.

Promises Full Support

In announcing Clapp's appointment, President Truman pledged "full support" to the work of the mission and promised "careful consideration to such assistance as we might appropriately render." He added:

"Traditional American cultural interests in the Near East have in recent years been reinforced by expanding economic and commercial ties and by recognition of the important role of that historic crossroads between three continents in the maintenance of peace and security in the world of today. This steady expansion of our relations with the Near East has given rise to a natural interest on the part of this Government in the welfare of the governments and peoples of that area. In so saying, I wish to emphasize that now as in the past we have no ax of special privilege to grind. We do, however, have an obvious community of interest with the countries of the Near East, and it is proper that we should give that relationship the careful and understanding consideration which it merits . . . "

Would Be Oversimplifying

He recalled his suggestion of technical assistance to underdeveloped areas: the "Point Four" of his inaugural address, and said the application of that program might do much to carry out recommendations of the survey. But, he continued:

"It would be oversimplifying the problem . . . to imply that solution of the economic problems of the Near East depends wholly upon outside assistance. It is only through the initiative and cooperation of the states of the Near East that progress can be made toward the solution of their own grave problems . . .

"I am convinced that, if the Near Eastern nations affected by the recent hostilities will put aside their differences and bend their energies to constructive cooperation, they can find a basis on which to build permanent peace and stability. The United States stands ready to lend a firm and helping hand in such an endeavor."

Rocket Firing Test Canceled by Navy

White Sands, N. Mex., Aug. 27 (AP).—Firing of a Navy Viking test rocket at White Sands proving ground has been canceled.

The shoot previously had been postponed from Tuesday until yesterday.

Capt. William A. Goring of the naval unit said today the test was canceled because of missile trouble. Goring did not indicate when or if the shoot will take place.

Whistle Stopping

Have a Chunk of the Potomac

By Orval Hopkins

IF YOU'RE going to throw common sense to the winds and get your car out on the roads next weekend, here's a short trip in which you can sort of box-in a piece of the Potomac. We went at it this way one day:

Drove from Arlington over to Bethesda, Md. (the hard way, that's us), and proceeded to the Great Falls of the Potomac. It was a great day at the Falls—a guard told me the water was up 2½ feet—and the tremendous flow of the river was a frightening thing. We had two fry along, so of course the falls had to share our attention. My wife spotted a man lugging a very heavy ice-container and she was able, through a couple of velvety remarks, to make him abandon his ice carrying and take to maligning his wife, whose idea he said it was. We saw him later, minus the ice box, and in much better humor. We ate our lunch at the park while the boys "fished" the river. Sam lost his pole and yelled like a slit cat; situation normal.

FROM Great Falls we followed a route known only, I then thought, to my father-in-law, who was driving. I found it now to be variously marked 190, 109 and 107 in Montgomery County. It threads through Potomac, Seneca, Poolesville and Martinsville and fetches up at White's Ferry, an enterprise you ought to know more about.

On approaching the ferry, we saw a man in straw hat, white shirt and tie sternly coaxing cars off a minute barge securely tied to a small apron on the bank. We took this man to be president and general manager, since he also directed our car and two others, the capacity of the ferry, onto the barge. He turned out to be just a passenger like ourselves. Simply felt an urge to load the ferry. I asked him how long the ferry had been running. "I'm 56," he said, "and it's been running as long as I can remember, 'cept for the war."

The barge is rigged for stability to cables stretched across the river to port and starboard. A two-cylinder gasoline engine slung out to one side powers her across the roughly 200 yards of river and its propeller shaft is then simply pulled out of the water and turned the other way for the return trip. Fare is 75 cents one way.

I yelled at the man who actually was president and general manager, asking the ferry's age. He mumbled a reply. "Hundred years?" I shouted. He mumbled again. "Under a hundred?" I bellowed. Again he muttered something. "Oh," I screamed, "Over a hundred, eh?" He nodded.

To get home you follow a dirt road to U. S. 15, turn southeast at Leesburg onto Virginia No. 7 and coast in.

A SPECIAL Labor Day weekend tour into the Pa-Ha Sa-Pa range in the Black Hills of South Dakota has been arranged by the Chicago and North Western. Trip leaves Chicago at 12:01 p. m. next Friday, returns following Monday evening . . . The 237th annual fiesta in Santa Fe., N. Mex., opens next Friday for a four-day whirl. It starts with the burning of "Zozobra," or old man gloom, and ends with a Hysterical Parade on Monday afternoon.

RUSTIC accommodations in mountain cabins in West Virginia State parks will be available to vacationists until November 1. Officials expect rental demands to ease following Labor Day. Rates range from $35.50 per week for the two-person cabin to $72.50 for the six-person type. Cabins may be occupied after September 5 in Cacapon, Lost River and Watoga State Parks. Write Division of State Parks, Conservation Commission, Charleston 5, W. Va., for more data.

FOUR CRUISES down the Mississippi to New Orleans will be conducted this fall by American Express and the Greene Line. The vessel Delta Queen will leave Cincinnati on September 10, October 1, October 22 and November 12. A. E. says, "The cruise route, which was a high adventure of yesteryear, will live again with all the varied and interesting features of river scenery to capture the voyager anew." Prices range from $225 to $250, depending on deck accommodations.

Air Line Provides Smooth, Cool Trip

Seashore travel to the nearby Eastern Shore and New Jersey resorts has taken on a new sparkle this summer. The long way around of four or five hours of travel has been shortened via the air route to an hour, or an hour and a half.

All American Airways has instituted a flight service with frequent schedules both to and from the resorts—travel time is shortened to a point where the trips take less time than a bus ride into Washington from the nearby suburban areas—with more time available to enjoy the pleasures of the resorts and a freedom from fatigue of long trips.

If a weekend is in prospect, All American offers a flight on Friday afternoon to the resort areas with return trips Sunday, or even early Monday morning in time for the office.

Railroad Safety Record

"The men of the Central Vermont Railway work for the safest railroad of its size in the United States," John A. Rogers, general manager, said in announcing that the C. V. had won first place for safety performance among the 19 group "D" railroads of the Nation. The country's railroads are divided into groups according to the number of "man-hours worked" in the operating, maintenance of way, mechanical and shop departments.

Favorable Exchange

A favorable exchange between British West Indies and American funds results in an approximate 17½ per cent discount at the Marine Hotel in Barbados, Mr. J. Blondin, manager, says.

Van Slycke Abroad

J. R. Van Slycke, president of Ober Steamship & Tourist Agency, Inc., left Washington Friday on the Pan-American Clipper to conduct a survey of conditions in Europe for 1950 travel. He is accompanied by travel agents from other cities in the United States.

433 Workers Underpaid During 1948

A total of 433 Washington workers were underpaid by more than $7000 during the 1948 calendar year, the District Minimum Wage and Industrial Safety Board reported to the Commissioners yesterday.

Most employers of these workers complied voluntarily with the minimum wage standards when the Board pointed out the underpayments, but 55 cases were referred to the corporation counsel's office. Thirty-eight were convicted and paid fines totaling $2000.

During the year, 1796 violations tof the District minimum wage law were reported. The largest number of complaints came from retail trade and public housekeeping establishments. The total represented a drop of 700 from the number reported in 1947.

The board raised minimum rates in November to $30 a week for all female employes except maids and cleaners and an hourly rate of 85 cents an hour plus $1.12½ for each hour of overtime. A weekly wage of $26.40 was set for maids and cleaners, with an hourly rate of 75 cents.

This level was raised on April 25 upon the recommendation of a District minimum wage conference to $31 a week for office workers and $29.75 for maids and cleaners.

A survey made during the year showed that women in manufacturing and wholesale trades averaged $37.20 a week, as compared to office workers who received $42 a week.

A 5 per cent rise in industrial accidents reported was noted over 1947 with 10,500 accidents listed.

Fraternity Opens Conclave Today

The Kappa Alpha fraternal order will open a week-long convention today in the Wardman Park Hotel. About 175 members are expected to attend.

The only convention in town this week will be the reunion of the Fifty-sixth Quartermaster Base Depot for which about 200 old buddies will gather at the Statler Hotel from Friday through next Sunday.

Dixie Musicmakers to Greet GAR Survivors

Indianapolis, Aug. 27 (U.P.). — A hillbilly band from Tennessee led by Roy Acuff, the grandson of a Confederate soldier, greeted the last tottering union veterans today as they arrived for the final convention of the once powerful Grand Army of the Republic.

The first annual GAR encampment was held here in 1866, two years after the Civil War ended. The last four-day meeting starts Sunday. Only six of the veterans assembled to say their last farewells.

Commander-in-chief Theodore A. Penland, 100, Portland, Oreg., was the first to arrive. He wore his blue serge uniform and hat and the insignia of his office.

Ten minutes later Albert Woolson, 102, Duluth, Minn., got off another train.

"I want a bowl of soup," he snapped. "Didn't have any lunch on the train."

The other delegates also were arriving by train, auto and plane. They were James A. Hard, 108, Rochester, N. Y.; Robert Barrett, 102, Princeton, Ky.; Joseph Clovese, 105, Pontiac, Mich., and Charles Chappel, 102, Long Beach, Calif.

The rest of the 16 living members of the GAR were too feeble to travel.

A great farewell tribute awaited the veterans. Patriotic organizations prepared a busy round of farewell events for the next four days, climaxed by a twilight parade around a monument to soldiers and sailors of all wars in the center of the city.

The GAR once numbered 409,000 members.

Carl R. Gray, U. S. Veterans administrator, will open the last encampment Sunday at a memorial service.

The Veterans Administration set up a temporary infirmary in the hotel where the six men will stay and staffed it with a doctor and a nurse.

The schedule for the encampment was was broken with frequent rest periods for the six veterans.

The rolls of the GAR were cut rapidly after reaching a peak in 1890. From the 409,000 members, only 110,000 were left in 1920. In 1940 there were only 1000. Last year only 28 remained. Insurance actuaries have predicted that two men would be left in 1952.

Until last year, the Civil War veterans talked of making the GAR a "last man's club." Hard revived that possibility this year. He said he favors another encampment next year.

District Veterans Service Center Increases Aid

The District Veterans Service Center aided 24,000 more veterans during the fiscal year 1949 than in the previous year, Col. Waldon E. Leonard, director, reported in his annual report yesterday.

A total of 111,322 were handled at the center, compared with 87,549 the previous year. Of these, 29,020 placed applications for housing, of which 8198 were filled.

The Veterans Administration representative assisted 7017 veterans and the Center placed 978 claims before VA for ex-servicemen. More than 30,000 photostats were furnished, saving veterans an estimated $35,000.

More than a thousand veterans were assisted in preparing applications for state bonuses totaling more than $500,000.

New Anacostia Bridge Planned

District Highway Department plans for erection of one or more additional bridges across the Anacostia River will be disclosed at the September meeting of the National Capital Park and Planning Commission.

Acting Engineer Commissioner L. E. Cox said the department's detailed report on the project will be unfolded to the NCPPC before being disclosed publicly.

In addition, the matter of whether to lift a building freeze order on the Marshall Heights area will also be taken up at the session, Lieut. Col. Cox said.

Beds Hurled Into Streets By Hurricane

Miami, Aug. 27 (AP).—Beds flew out of third floor apartment windows and sailed a full block away.

Wooden and metal doors sped through the air like magic carpets.

These were the tales of residents along this hard-hit hurricane coastal area today.

A journey northward from Miami on the heels of last night's hurricane showed damage and debris growing worse by the mile from Pompano Beach up to West Palm Beach.

"Like a Steamroller"

A solid steel box car loaded with lumber was smacked off a railroad track.

Police Officer D. E. Majewski in Lake Worth gave a capsule version of his town: "It looks like a steamroller ran through this place."

Double windows blew out of an apartment bedroom and all the furniture was sucked out behind the windows, he said.

Majewski and Police Officer Bob Blair said they had just walked out of a downtown restaurant when the windows and doors crashed on one side and onrushing air lifted doors high above the street on the other side.

At West Palm Beach, 110-mile winds scooped 40-foot waves out of the Atlantic and hurled them on the shore.

The George Washington Hotel in West Palm Beach shuddered under the gusts that exceeded 125 miles an hour.

At least 10 heads were snapped off parking meters. A service station operator had chained a batch of new tires together but the wind's force snapped the chain and the tires rolled away.

An iron utility pole was bent like a hairpin.

A gust clipped a pedestrian off his feet and skidded him at least 20 feet down the street, smacking him against a utility pole.

Ladies' new frocks were sucked from a dress shop and hurled into the street.

were tossed about like so many leaves in a breeze.

Twenty-four private planes were strewn about the International Airport like wrecked toys.

West Palm Beach, Palm Beach, Delray Beach, Stuart and Lake Worth were sprinkled with glass, loose boards, signs, uprooted trees and foliage.

Tons of sand tossed up by pounding waves piled onto the lawns of the wealthy on the ocean front. Giant slabs of concrete were slapped about the unfinished pool at the Biltmore Hotel.

Grapefruit hurtled through the air like yellow cannon balls.

Telephone poles are down for nearly 10 miles between Boca Raton and Stuart.

Storm winds and rain caused a short circuit in a Florida power and light generating plant at Arcadia, 50 miles west of Sarasota, far down the Florida West Coast. The break cut power to three towns—Fort Ogden, Arcadia and Nocatee—in DeSoto County.

Citrus Damage Put at 90%

Fort Pierce and St. Lucie County were dealt a body blow.

The citrus crop was literally on the ground and estimates of 90 per cent damage were made.

The Fort Pierce business district was seriously damaged. About 50 National Guardsmen are patroling the streets to prevent looting.

At least 1000 persons were still in hurricance shelters and appeals were made for food.

Twelve freight cars of a Florida East Coast railroad train were blown off the tracks between Canal Point and Fort Pierce at the height of the storm.

Forecasters said gales along the Atlantic coastal section would continue for many hours. Warnings will be lowered on the Gulf side of the disturbance.

The American Red Cross announced in Washington that an initial allocation of $100,000 for relief of hurricane victims had been set up.

Armed National Guardsmen patrolled streets on the Florida Gold Coast—the Palm Beaches—today to prevent looters from scooping wares from show windows.

The hard-hit playgrounds of the wealthy were a scene of wreckage and confusion after a two-hour battering by the storm. Looters appeared in the storm's wake before the winds subsided. Fashion and jewelry shops—their plate glass windows shattered—made easy pickings, but the show of armed force soon brought a stop to the vandalism.

Weary workers attacked the herculean task of restoring a semblance of order out of the wreckage along a wide belt from Palm Beach on the east coast to Tampa on the west.

Many Places Isolated

Many communities still were isolated today, their communications lines severed and roads leading to them blockaded by splintered trees and caveins.

Senator Holland (D., Fla.), announced in Washington that he had received information that three persons were dead and 58 injured. The Red Cross admitted there may be more casualties when some of the stranded communities are reached.

Business Places Damaged

An early Red Cross survey estimated that 25 per cent of West Palm Beach houses had suffered some hurricane damage. Damages to business places ran higher.

Every object that could be detached by 150-mile-an-hour winds had been ripped from its mooring. Oil cans, garbage cans, vegetable stands, window boarding, 2-foot-thick telephone poles and their trailing power lines lay in the streets.

A crushed plate glass window of the Guarantee Safe & Trust Co. left the bank vault in plain view. A trailer lay on its side near the county courthouse, bedding and clothing strewn in the street.

Roofs Lay in Streets

On Clematis st., main shopping thoroughfare, a 5 and 10-cent store was windowless with all its wares within reaching distance. Dozens of pairs of shoes law sodden in the open display window of a chain shoe store.

In several sections of the city, rooks lay in the streets. A 100-foot section of a warehouse wall was ripped loose and blown 30 feet. The rest of the building collapsed.

Palm Beach imported roof tilings, lawn monuments and intricate grille work suffered.

Palm fronds, coconuts and sea debris littered the wide lawns of the Joseph W. Davies estate. Winston Guest's frame house on the east shore of Lake Worth suffered minor damage.

Many a man living on the shores of Lake Okechobee in south-central Florida voiced a silent prayer of thankfulness this morning. The dykes held this time.

They had been erected by Army engineers after a 1928 disaster that killed 1800 persons when winds picked up waters of the lake and dumped them over the levees and onto the helpless population.

Col. R. W. Pearson of the Engineers said last night's storm pounded the levees harder and for a longer period than in 1928.

"The hurricane has provided the first real test of the levee system," he said.

Red Cross Shelters Thousands

The Red Cross sheltered thousands during the storm's height, feeding them coffee and cake and tending their children.

The winds, floods and power failures knocked out many of Florida's radio stations.

The great winds toppled 200-foot towers, slammed water through windows and otherwise hampered radio transmission.

Ideology Test Can Be Won, Matthews Says

Titusville, Pa., Aug. 27 (AP).—Secretary of the Navy Matthews said today that Americans can "favorably resolve" the ideological conflict between east and west if they "are ready to pay the price."

"We have learned through the operations of the Truman doctrine, the Marshall plan and the Atlantic pact that we can hold off aggression if we demonstrate firmness of purpose and adequate military strength to back up our foreign policy," Matthews said.

He described the military aid program now before Congress as "the latest phase of our plan for the progressive development of international stability and world peace."

In the address prepared for delivery at the 90th anniversary celebration of the drilling of America's first commercial oil well, the Navy secretary blamed "atheistic communism" for 'menacing the peace of the world."

He said that Soviet Russia's "dream of world conquest" had compelled the United States to adopt a national and international program which places a "terrific strain on our economic resources."

"The outcome of the new conflict of ideologies," he said, "depends upon us. We can favorably resolve even that issue if we so desire, and are ready to pay the price for so precious a victory."

Matthews said that "Godless, cynical, grasping, materialistic, totalitarian Marxist communism," is the "greatest challenge ever hurled at western civilization."

It was the second marriage joining the two families. Another of the Admiral's daughters, Bolling, is married to William E. Clarke, jr., a cousin of the Stablers.

1000 Nights Even—Not More, Less

The original name of the "Arabian Nights" was "A Thousand Nights," not "One Thousand and One Nights" as it is known today.

That is disclosed in a study of a fragment of a manuscript believed to have been copied around 800 A. D. by an Arab scribe from a third century book. The manuscript is thought to be not only the earlist known "Arabian Nights" but perhaps the earlist known paper book.

The title of the "Arabian Nights," introduced into the Western world about 250 years ago, was probably changed to the Arabic "Alf Lailah was Lailah" or "One Thousand and One Nights" because of the Arabs' superstitious dislike of round numbers.

In the beginning of the "Arabian Nights," Dinazad beseeches Scheherazade: "My dear sister, ere I leave you, which will be shortly, I pray you to tell me one of those pleasant stories you have read."

Miss Nabia Abbott, leading woman scholar of Arabic writings and professor at the Oriental Institute of the University of Chicago—which owns the precious manuscript fragment—in the current issue of the Journal of Near Eastern Studies also identifies Dinazad as a nurse, rather than a sister of Scheherazade as implied in modern editions of the "Arabian Nights."

Senate Votes Study Of Overseas Setup

By Chalmers M. Roberts
Post Reporter

The Senate yesterday voted to set up a little Hoover Commission to study the Government's overseas activities and how they are run.

The proposal, which now goes to the House, was passed without objection, but only after Majority Leader Lucas said he had "grave doubts about the advisability of creating such a commission at this time."

The Hoover Commission on Government reorganization had recommended a study of the problem of administering the Nation's many overseas activities but did not have time to do the job itself. The study has been indorsed by the State Department the Economic Cooperation Administration and the Budget Bureau, among others.

Would Have 12 Members

As approved by the Senate, the new Commission on Overseas Administration wiuld be composed of four Senators, four House members and four persons from the executive branch to be named by the President.

They would gather information for both the President and Congress on "overlapping, duplication and conflicting operations" of the many agencies active overseas.

A minority of the Senate Expenditures Committee had proposed immediate establishment of an Administration of Overseas Affairs but the majority wanted a study first and the Senate agreed. The report must be made by March 1, 1951, and the commission would cease to exist a month later.

Senator Ives (R., N. Y.), speakink for the proposal, said there was a "great need" for the study. He assured Senators, however, that "very likely" the commission would not have to travel farther than New York in gathering information. It could send a single member or staff members overseas, if it wished. Lucas indicated he did not like the idea of further additional junketing by Congressmen, but Ives declared the commission was no such thing.

Pay Bill Passed Over

The House-approved bill to boost the pay of top officials of the executive branch was passed over on the Senate calendar on objection of Senator Hendrickson (R., N. J.).

Also passed over was a bill to prevent excessive retirement payments to short-time civil service employes. The bill, held up because of a technicality, grew out of the revelation that a bankruptcy referee who previously had worked in a House member's office would draw $17,500 in benefits while paying in only $7.42. The bill is expected to pass on the next calendar card.

Would Destroy It
Red Writer Attacks Press of U. S.

Moscow, Aug. 27 (AP).—David Zaslavsky, editorial writer for Pravda, told the concluding session of the Soviet Union conference of peace proponents today "the capitalistic press is an evil which must be destroyed by democracy."

He compared the American press to that of Hitlerite Germany in commenting on an editorial he said called for the bombing of Russian cities.

Prof. J. D. Bernal, British physicist, told the conference science in the capitalistic countries is being put almost exclusively to use in preparations for mass destruction of peoples in war.

Bernal was denied a visa when he sought to attend a Communist-organized peace conference in New York last spring. The Moscow peace conference is similar to others held earlier in New York, Paris and Prague.

It ended with organization of a permanent committee of prominent Soviet citizens to collect funds in the USSR to aid the international partisans of peace.

Hunt Signs Affidavit

committee there is no truh about much of the testimony concerning him. In some cases, on the other hand, he acknowledged it had been accurate.

Denies Wrongdoing

But he stoutly maintained he is innocent of any wrongdoing. And he asserted the business he is in is entirely proper.

Referring to his company, Hunt said:

"We expect to continue in business for a long time to come." He added:

"Because of my thorough knowledge of the workings of many Government agencies and departments and because of my wide circle of friends and acquaintances in those departments, I was able to perform a service which I know was of real value to my clients and I believe of real value to the Government."

Senator Hoey (D., N. C.), the committee chairman, told reporters he had not seen the Hunt affidavit yet. Hoey added that the committee will study the document before deciding whether to admit it to the record.

The committee, meanwhile, got a helping hand from the Justice Department in another phase of its investigation.

Gets Look at Records

The department, a committee official said, has let the Senate investigators take a look at records dealing with a customs duty incident in which John Maragon was involved in 1945.

Maragon, who once had entree to the White House, is another central figure in the inquiry. The committee has received documentary evidence that four years ago Maragon tried to bring through customs a supply of valuable perfume oils disguised as champagne for the White House.

The committee has been trying to find out why Maragon never was prosecuted in the case. He did pay a $1155 penalty.

Hunt declared that Washington management counselors have been helpful in slicing through Government red tape for small businessmen. But he added:

"There have been abuses and undoubtedly will continue to be abuses in this field, as well as in every other."

Suggests Curb for Abuses

He suggested a law to curb abuses which do exist.

"I should be happy to be the first man to register under such an act," Hunt said.

The law he proposed would require every Washington representative such as Hunt to register with the Justice Department, and furnish the department with the names of all persons and firms they represented, the information to be made public.

Hunt said the committee "has seen fit to call only three persons who, by any stretch of the imagination, could be called clients of mine." He said one of those was a "disgruntled former client" and that another was Paul D. Grindle "who pretended to be a small businessman seeking Government contracts in order to obtain material for a newspaper story for the New York Herald Tribune, his former employer."

Grindle touched off the Senate investigation when the Herald Tribune published his story of how he paid Hunt $1000 for help in seeking a Government contract.

Hunt said that on the other hand, "the committee or its investigators have, to my knowledge, interviewed or seen the affidavits of at least 20 clients of mine, reputable businessmen who are well satisfied with their dealings with me."

Hunt devoted a good part of his 17-page affidavit to a rebuttal of Grindle's testimony.

Grindle, now a Massachusetts furniture manufacturer, said on the stand that Hunt told him: "I have only one thing to sell and that is influence. My influence is based on my reputation and it is impeccable."

Hunt contended in his affidavit that the remark "was obviously dreamed up by someone . . ."

Hunt said Grindle's testimony "discloses that he had no intention even at the start of entering into a bona fide arrangement with us, but was merely seeking material for some kind of an expose."

Strike Hits Goodrich

this action to protect the interest of our membership."

Lloyd indicated that the union might have been willing to continue working while continuing negotiations beyond the contract expiration date, had it not been for certain company demands. The union chief said that company, among other things, asked for the right to file grievances against the union and take such grievances to arbitration.

"This particular clause alone," Lloyd asserted, "would have given the company every opportunity to bankrupt local unions by forcing every little issue to arbitration—an expensive process."

The company, in a prestrike letter to its employes, insisted its workers were the highest paid in the industry, receiving $1.65 an hour compared with the $1.52 average hourly wage for the industry.

"None of the union's arguments can change the facts that business conditions will not permit us to raise selling prices," the company said. "That increases in cost now would bring further losses in sales, wages, and jobs and that a strike would give our business to other rubber companies."

25,000 Payrolls Drop

According to the Bureau of Labor Statistics, there's been a 25,000 drop in rubber industry payrolls from November to May. The union itself claims that 50,000 of its members have been laid off. Most of the industry is working six hours a day.

Some observers believe that union politics may have something to do with the timing of the strike against Goodrich.

Leader of the Goodrich local is Sam Bass, who is seeking the international presidency at an election next month. Bass was outspoken in his criticism last year when the Firestone local took an 11 cents an hour pay increase for the third round, and thereby set the pattern for the industry. Thus there's a feeling among rubber union leaders to "let Sam try it" this year.

Outcome of the Goodrich strike will doubtlessly affect Bass' election hopes. Bass was defeated by two votes for the top post last year by L. S. Buckmaster. The executive board of the union elected Buckmaster last May in a fierce inter-union row and named Lloyd president. Buckmaster, accused by his foes as lacking in militancy will be seeking vindication at the forthcoming convention.

that very little, if any, information would be given to the press, since the preliminary talks were concerned mainly with reaching agreement on facts and figures to be submitted to the heads of the delegations when they open deliberations.

A general review of the British trade and financial situation was given by Sir Henry Wilson-Smith, head of the British technical delegation, at yesterday's meetings. The British delegation submitted a paper on multilateral trade treaties. It is the British opinion that London cannot be bound by the principles of multilateral trade unless the United States is willing to import more British goods.

James E. Webb, Undersecretary of State, is heading the United States delegation at the preliminary talks. Others members of the delegation include Willard L. Thorp, Assistant Secretary of State for Economic Affairs; William McChesney Martin, jr., Assistant Secretary of the Treasury, and Richard M. Bissell, jr., Assistant Deputy Administrator of the Economic Cooperation Administration.

Foreign Minister Ernest Bevin and Chancellor of the Exchequer Sir Stafford Cripps are sailing from Britain Wednesday on the Mauretania and will reach here September 6.

Secretary of the Treasury John W. Snyder will be chairman of the monetary talks, which also will be attended by Secretary of State Dean Acheson. But Secretary Acheson and Foreign Minister Bevin are expected to devote most of their time to side talks on world political developments, particularly those affecting China, Yugoslavia and the new German state.

Togliatti Reported Seeking Annulment control of the rest of Bolivia.

Air force planes ferried reinforcements to Cochabamba today, and La Paz provincial Governor Guillermo Estrada predicted the rebels there would be overpowered.

The rebels reportedly captured two airplanes at Santa Cruz.

Bolivia's second largest military air base is at Cochabamba. The acting President said that no war planes were at the base when the rebels struck.

The commander of the Cochabamba rebels was identified as retired Gen. Carlos Penaililo, an MNR leader and a former Bolivian Ambassador to Venezuela.

The new uprising was the second serious disorder in recent months blamed on the MNR. The bloody tin mine strikes of last May, in which two Americans were killed, were described by the government as the prelude to a revolutionary attempt by the MNR.

In February, a state of siege was proclaimed through the country after the government announced an MNR plot to seize power had been discovered and frustrated.

The Revolutionary Movement dominated Bolivia from late 1943 until July, 1946, after seizing power and installing Maj. Gualberto Villarroel as president.

Villarroel was overthrown in 1946 by a mob of students and workers which lynched him and several members of his government. A revolutionary junta ruled the country until January, 1947, when the present government, headed by President Enrique Hertzog, was elected.

Hertzog went on leave of absence for medical treatment some time ago and Urriolagoitia has been acting in his place.

Fact-Finders Ask More Time on Report

By the United Press

The White House is expected to announce Monday an extension of time for President Truman's fact-finding board in the steel wage dispute to submit its report. The report is due Tuesday.

The board, which has been holding hearings in New York, is understood to have requested an extension which will delay the report until after Labor Day.

A White House spokesman said yesterday he did not know if the request for an extension had been received.

Fair Area to Form Rural Life Center

By Don Olesen
Post Reporter

Last week, just 19 miles from the District line, a group of hard-headed idealists—farmers, businessmen, professional workers—thought they had an answer to that plaintive old ditty:

"How You Gonna Keep 'em Down on the Farm?"

A part of that answer was the Montgomery County Fair, which wound up a successful three-day stand at Gaithersburg last night.

It was the first county-wide fair since 1928. Thousands came from Maryland, Washington and Virginia to see it. A bumper turnout of dairy and beef cattle, swine, sheep and fowl filled the new fair barns.

Young People's Fair

But the turnout the hardheaded idealists wanted, and got, was the young people—the 4-H Clubbers, the future farmers of America and their friends. In a way, it was their fair.

If you walked down the fair's rows of barns, by the judging ring, through the tiny midway and the farm machinery exhibit, it might have looked like just another county fair. There was a difference, though.

The fair grounds are only a part of the 64-acre gamble county leaders think of as rural Montgomery's future recreational and agricultural center.

Those acres of former pastureland were bought more than a year ago by a new group with a jawbreaking title: "The Montgomery County Cooperative Agricultural Center, Inc."

The idea was simple. The "association" wanted, not just a fair site, but a year-round focal point for everyone in rural Montgomery County.

365 Days a Year

J. M. Barnsley, prosperous county farmer and association chairman, put it this way: "This center isn't just something for three days of the year—this is good for 365."

Today, the association has a conservative $150,000 worth of facilities on its 64 acres. There are four cattle barns, two sheep and swine barns, a headquarters, rest room facilities, a a gate house. A horse barn is under way, and rafters are cut for a 62-by-14-foot field house for year-round athletic events and displays of home exhibits.

Not too far from the fair site is a grove of trees with picnic tables. Near by is a huge scooped-out valley scheduled for duty as a lake and boating center. There is a first-rate ball field with floodlights.

All of this cost the association about $33,000. Between that figure and the $150,000 valuation was the volunteer labor of school children, 4-H groups, and countless adults, plus the outright material donations of contractors and businessmen.

The association organized groups to tackle each center problem. There was one group for lumber, donated by area farmers; one for construction of the road, another to supply earth-moving machinery, one for plumbing, one for electricity.

Last June 4, the association in one swoop dug, erected, and fitted out most of the fair site you can see today. During "The Day," more than 1000 persons labored in the best tradition of a frontier barn raising. "The Day" was a brainchild of County Agent O. W. Anderson.

Such a project meant hard, unpaid labor for many. It meant farm chores untended, business deferred.

For example, dairy farmer W. Lawson King, who headed operations on "The Day," though the association's "whole idea is to keep these farm boys and girls from leaving the soil."

He pointed to a 4-H Club boy leading a heifer into its barn. "It's a serious problem when the city offers them more opportunity than the farm," he said. "We want to give them the know-how to make good here."

But the fair, focal point of the center, is a place of business, too.

George Lechlider, breeder of pure-bred sheep and swine, put it this way: "We worked for this fair because it's a good place to exhibit and sell, and learn. You put your hog in a ring with your neighbor's and you know which is better. You learn."

Or take Grover Walker, pure-bred cattle farmer who helped cut timbers for the center buildings: "Up to this fair we never had a really good place to show our Holsteins. We've got a good start. Maybe next year we can double the facilities."

Potential Moneymakers

Bruce Mainhart is one of the many businessmen who helped make a go of the center plan. Mainhart, an electrical contractor, supervised that work in the mushrooming area. "Next year," he said, "we won't have to get along on contributions." The ball field, the annual fair, and rent on the future fieldhouse are all potential "moneymakers," Mainhart said.

R. N. Whipp, secretary of the fair and Assistant County Agent, was in charge of the gang that felled and sawed 125,000 board feet of lumber for center buildings. He had his own reasons for the effort.

"We wanted to get our young going somewhere besides the beer joints," he said. Whipp pointed to the lighted ball park, free to youngsters under 14 years, and to the future fieldhouse and swimming facilities.

Farm women worked. Two of these were Mrs. Thomas E. Bailey of Laytonsville and Mrs. Charles Linthicum of Boyds, co-chairmen of the fair food supply. Profits from sales went to the association.

Mrs. Bailey thought the center would be "a great help to Montgomery County women and children." It gies them a chance to exchange ideas on homemaking and farming during and between fairs, she said, and "gives youngsters a place to go."

Has Its Critics, Too

The center vision has its critics, too. John E. Muncaster, veteran 79-year-old fairgoer, organizer and connoisseur had this to say:

"This fair will be hot for three years or so and then it will cool off. I've seen a lot of them come and go, human nature being what it is."

Muncaster used to manage the old county fair, when it was held in Rockville. He thought his old fairs were "a right smart better—we knew where we were going and this fair hasn't found out yet."

But association chairman, J. M. Barnsley, was more optimistic. "Give us a couple of years and we'll have a real fair here," he said.

He and his 20-man association board of directors will work hard to see that the center "isn't dominated by a handful of men for profit."

The younger men who dreamed and built the center apparently were willing to bet their vision would pay dividends for rural Montgomery County.

Bill Passed to Let Army Take Aliens

The Senate yesterday passed and sent to the House legislation to allow the Army to enlist up to 10,000 qualified, unmarried aliens for terms of not less than five years.

Ordinarily in peacetime the Army can enlist only citizens or those who have made legal declaration of intention to become citizens. Among other qualifications to be set up by the Secretary of the Army, with approval of the Secretary of State, applicants would have to be at least 18 years old and not more than 35.

Alumni Plan for Central Hit

A plan of Central High alumni to preserve the school for white students and to relieve congestion at Cardozo High was denounced yesterday by two District organizations.

In a joint statement, the District branch of the National Association for the Advancement of Colored People and Local 27 of the AFL American Federation of Teachers, called the plan "completely unsatisfactory."

The proposal was put forth last month as a modification of "Plan 3." Plan 3 was submitted to the Board of Education by Superintendent of Schools Hobart M. Corning as one of three possible methods of eliminating overcrowding at Cardozo.

It was the only one of the three plans that did not call for transferring Cardozo's Negro students to Central. The alumni proposal would transfer Cardozo students to Miner Teachers College, move Miner students to Wilson Teachers College and send Wilson students to Roosevelt High School.

To transfer Cardozo's 1750 students to Miner Teachers College, built to house 300 students, the joint statement said, "was possibly the most absurd suggestion yet made in the effort to relieve Cardozo."

The statement charged that gross defects in the facilities at Miner and Wilson would make the transfers of "no advantage."

Edward T. Dunlap, president of Central's Alumni Association, yesterday said he had not yet seen the report and would wait until the association's board of directors considers it this week before commenting.

Three Services Will Try To Find Positions for 135,000 Fired Workers

The major layoff of civilians in the military agencies will be made as humanely as possible.

Each of the three services—the Army, Navy, and Air Force—promises to do its best to find other jobs for the 135,000 employes to be discharged over the next four months.

The agencies have agreed to give qualified laid-off career employes the first crack at jobs held by temporary employes or vacancies. As a Defense official explained:

"We want to avoid having, for example, the Air Force hiring new employes and the Navy firing the same type of workers. We want to give those Navy people the opportunity to transfer to the AF jobs."

The Navy has arranged for its commandants to issue each week a list of its temporary jobs—jobs to which qualified laid-off Navy career employes may be transferred at Navy expense.

The three big services also are planning to "freeze" reconversions of their employes from war service and temporary to permanent status until the cutbacks are completed.

Thousands of employes are now in the process of having their temporary wartime appointment converted to regular Civil Service status. The expected "freeze" order will be tough on those in the Army, Navy, and Air Force since they will be far less likely to retain their jobs with a temporary rating. But as a military official explained:

"We would have to continually change the retention registers as employes are converted to regular status unless we freeze reconversions. Furthermore, the bulk of the employes to be laid off have career status and there isn't much point in making the group any bigger."

Within a few hours after the sweeping layoff was announced, Army Secretary Gordon Gray sent the following memo to his operating heads:

"The welfare of the many civilians to be released from their employment is of grave concern to me. Their best services and support demand that commanding officers use every means for bettering their chances of finding other employment. It is incumbent upon all station commanders who are releasing civilian employes to make an inventory of employment opportunities in their localities by contacting industrial and other employers, State and local official employment agencies, and other normal employment channels.

"This should be a continuing task until employes involved have been finally separated from the station. Employes who are released, as well as employes who remain with the department, should be made to feel that the expression of our appreciation for their best services means active assistance to them now."

A similar message was sent out by Air Secretary W. Stuart Symington. It said in part:

"Air Force civilian employes have been and will continue to be an integral part of the Air Force team. In carrying out the current retrenchment, every assistance in the location of other employment will be rendered to employes being separated. Particular efforts will be made to place AF career employes within the department. Contacts will be made immediately to determine other employment opportunities in the community with other Government agencies, private employers, State and local offices of the U. S. Employment Service, and other employment channels."

The Navy has given its commandants clear-cut instructions along the same line. It has been rather successful in finding jobs for many of its laid-off employes.

These sympathetic messages and instructions from top military leaders are a good example of personnel relations. They will offset somewhat the intemperate and ill-considered cracks of others who referred to the employes to be laid off as "drones" and 'loafers."

It happens that the mass discharge will wipe out the jobs of hundreds of nonveteran career employes with more than 20 years of service—people who possess some of the best technical, scientific and professional brains in the military agencies.

The unsettled world situation being what it is, the military services might well be begging these same people to return to their jobs in a few months. It makes no sense to give them a black eye after long and faithful service.

Woman Denies Serving Husband With Divorce Suit

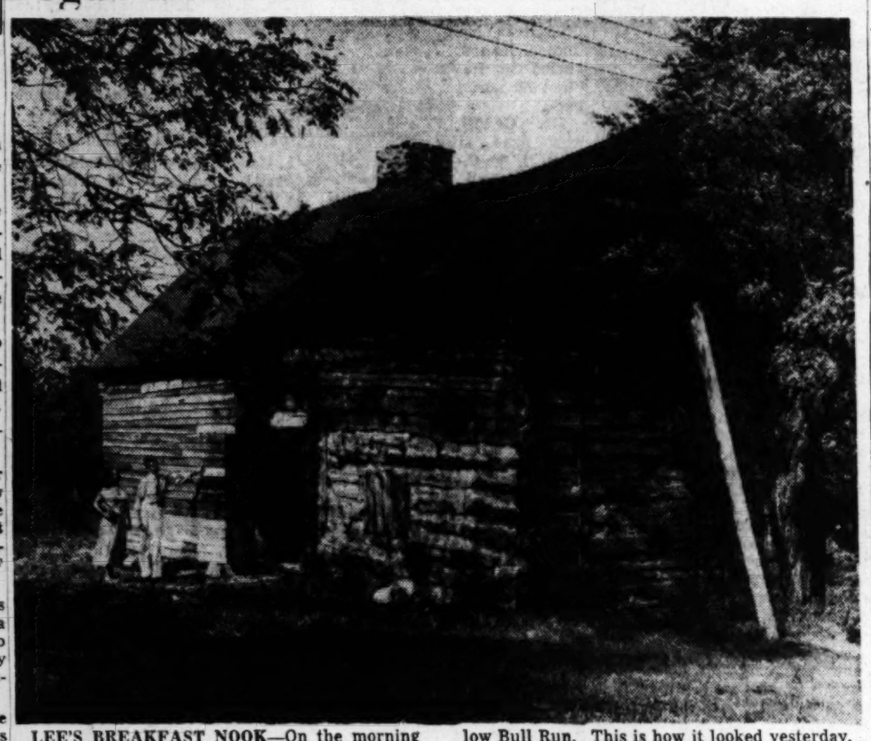
Mrs. Florence C. Smith, 4007 Connecticut ave. nw., denied yesterday that she had her estranged husband served with a divorce suit when he came to her apartment to talk over a possible reconciliation.

Mrs. Smith issued the denial in answer to the claim of the husband, Melvin C. Smith, of Paris, France, that the service should be quashed as fraudulent.

Her answer, filed through Attorney Lewis Shapiro, stated that Smith came to this country on business and saw her for about 15 minutes between other appointments. She said there was no talk whatsoever about a reconciliation.

He contends that on August 12, a deputy marshal came out of another room in the apartment and served him.

Dogan House Becomes Shrine . . .



LEE'S BREAKFAST NOOK—On the morning of the Second Battle of Manassas—fought 87 years ago yesterday—Gen. Robert E. Lee had his breakfast in Dogan House, a few miles below Bull Run. This is how it looked yesterday, when it was turned over to the National Park Service by the Prince William Chamber of Commerce

By Harry Goodwin—The Washington Post

HISTORIAN'S HISTORIAN—H. I. Hutton (left) of Warrenton, Va., who lived on the battlefield and saw the fighting at the age of 5, tells what he remembers to Dr. Douglas Southall Freeman, noted historian

Manassas, Va., Aug. 27 (Spl.).—Historic Dogan House, focal point of much of the fighting in the Second Battle of Manassas, was turned over to the National Park Service today in ceremonies on the ninety-second anniversary of the struggle.

The occasion led Dr. Douglas S. Freeman, noted historian and the day's principal speaker, to observe that the United States is threatened by an industrial division as costly as the division between North and South in the Civil War.

More than 600 persons heard Dr. Freeman's address and witnessed transfer of Dogan House to the National Park Service for addition to the battlefield park. The house was presented by Prince William Chamber of Commerce President E. D. Gothwaite to Thomas J. Allen, NPS regional director.

Speaking from a platform erected on terrain which figured prominently in the second battle, Dr. Freeman told a graphic story of the struggle. He enlarged upon the weakness of the Confederate transport system and its inability to advance over muddy terrain.

Then he observed: "We are now threatened by industrial division. It may be as costly as division between the States.

"Here is a Bull Run, running quietly into the Occoquan, and thence into the Potomac," said the author of "Robert E. Lee" and "Lee's Lieutenants."

"The Potomac, once a fierce dividing line, is now crossed by thousands daily who think of this as a dividing line no more.

"It is well that its significance as a dividing line should be forgotten. But division and its awful cost must never be forgotten.

Among the guests were Maj. Gen. Manuel C. Shepherd, jr., commandant of the Quantico Marine Post, and Congressman Howard W. Smith of the Eighth Virginia District.

2-Car Crash Injures Five At 6th and Constitution

Five persons, including a 9-month-old girl, were injured in a two-car collision at 6th st. and Constitution ave. nw. at 5:25 p. m. yesterday.

Only one victim, Mrs. Mary Mueller, 35, of 1108 H st. ne., required hospitalization. The others were treated at Emergency Hospital and discharged.

Mrs. Mueller was admitted to Providence Hospital with a possible fracture of the left leg.

Treated at Emergency Hospital were Mrs. Mueller's baby daughter, Sandra, who suffered bruises; Mrs. Mueller's husband, Henry, 46, possibly fractured ribs, Hugh Walker, 61, of Waverly, Va., dislocated left elbow, and Mrs. Rhea Walker, 51, lacerations.

Both cars were nearly demolished in the crash which, according to Pvt. E. E. Proudfoot of the Accident Investigation Squad, occurred when Walker driving east on Constitution ave. attempted a left hand turn into 6th st. and collided with Mueller's car.

Miss Ann Jeffers, 1208 E st. se., a sister of Mrs. Mueller, was shaken up but escaped injury.

Edward M. Foreman, a cab driver, of 3383 Blaine st. ne., passed the scene soon after. He administered first aid to Mrs. Mueller after helping carry her from the wreckage.

A mother and two small children were injured, police said, when their automobile collided with two others about 9 p. m. yesterday at 11th st. and Maryland ave. sw.

The mother, Mrs. Helen V. Morris, 24, of 1647 Lang pl. ne., received possible fractured ribs, and 11-month-old Wayne Morris, superficial scratches, when both were thrown from the automobile by the impact, police said. Georgia Ann Morris, 2, also received superficial scratches. All were released after treatment at Emergency Hospital.

The Morris automobile, driven by George B. Morris, 25, a salesman and the children's father, was struck by two automobiles traveling abreast at the intersection, police said. The other drivers, they said, were John B. Garrett, 18, a roofer of 1426 Duke st., Alexandria, and Christopher H. Dole, 45, of 625 Quincy st., Arlington, an instructor at the Naval Receiving Station. Garrett was charged with colliding and posted $25 collateral.

The other drivers were not charged, police explained, because Morris is a District resident and Dole is employed here and are available for a hearing. All three are scheduled to appear for a hearing in the Corporation Counsel's office on Monday.

Hit by Motorcycle

A pedestrian, John Caldwell, 62, of 914 26th st. nw., was injured when struck by a motorcycle at G st. and Virginia ave. nw. at 10:20 p. m. At Emergency Hospital he was reported to have received a possible fractured skull, lacerations to the head and brushburns. His condition was undetermined.

The cyclist was identified by police as Francis A. Thompson, 38, of 611 Quintana pl. nw., a messenger for the Radio Corporation of America.

Photographer Biggest North Beach Gambler

By John M. London
Post Reporter

Photographing the gambling at North Beach, Md., turns out to be one of the biggest gambles in this wide-open little town.

Picture-snappers take more chances than the customers who play the slot machines, roulette wheels, chuck-a-lucks or crap games. And their odds are notorious.

Two Washington newspapermen (including this one) tried this new game of chance Friday night.

For our trouble, we got chased by hoodlums, strong-armed by the manager of a gambling joint, threatened by the sheriff, intimidated by the police, and held captive until we gave up some of our photographic film.

It started with a picture of a child, about 10 years old, pulling the handle of a slot machine. Slot machines are legal in Calvert County—but only for players at least 16 years old. (Editor's Note: Picture on Page 1.)

Charles Del Vecchio, Washington Post photographer, took the picture. When his flash bulb went off the fun started.

Parents Had Consented

Parents of the child had consented to the picture. The operators of the slot-machine joint hadn't.

"They grabbed at our arms, shouted insults and threats and followed us outside into the street. We broke away and got to our car. We stopped a mile from town at the Stinnett roadside restaurant and made a phone call. When we returned to our car, another machine was parked alongside. Three men in civilian clothes pinned us up against this car."

"Hand over them pictures, you guys!" one man shouted.

"You don't get outa here in one piece until you come clean," he warned.

Then came more questions and threats:

"Who are you? Identify yourselves . . . We'll call police . . . You can't do this to us . . . If you want trouble you'll get it . . . I'm a policeman but I don't have any identification with me . . . I don't need it . . . You had no right to take them pictures . . . Hand them over or you'll get a puss full of fist . . ."

Your reporter remembered a phone call he ought to make.

"No you don't," said one of the friendly citizens of North Beach. With one paw on your correspondent's shirt front and a fist waving threateningly he pinned the reporter against a car fender.

Del Vecchio (always the diplomat) shouted, "Hold it. Let's not get excited; let's talk this over. You can have the film."

That did it. That great big fist dropped down. So did your reporter's blood pressure. Somebody yelled something about getting the police. One man drove off. In about 10 minutes another car drove up, wedging in our car so it couldn't be moved.

A uniformed man got out.

More altercation.

"You had no right to take them pictures!"

"We got the parents' permission."

"But you didn't ask the proprietor."

"We don't ask permission of Grand Central Station to take pictures there either. It is a public place."

"You don't ask him because you knew he wouldn't let ya."

"Who are you?"

The Chief of Police

"I'm Frank Smith, the chief of police."

"Are you charging us with anything?"

"Nope!"

"Are we under arrest?"

"Nope."

"Then we'd like to leave. Let us out. Move your car."

"I don't believe that can be arranged."

But finally, the chief left, after muttering about seeing the State's attorney. He declined to provide any protection against an "unavoidable accident" on the way home.

We went into the tavern to telephone.

Sheriff Roy Howard then arrived on the scene. He warned he might have to keep us overnight if we didn't give up our flim.

Charley handed over an unexposed film.

The sheriff and his pals left and we came home, after telephoning Maryland State police for protection.

We lost one blank film.

That's less than the other gamblers at North Beach lose.

But we thought we were going to lose a lot more for a while.

Gallinger Expansion Program Postponed

Need for Improved Anesthesia Plan Sets Back Schedule For Operating Room

Plans for substantial expansion of Gallinger Hospital's operating room suite have been shelved until the institution's anesthiology department is built up.

Commissioner Guy Mason, who supervises operation of the Health Department, disclosed the change in program yesterday, commenting that the present surgical facilities cannot be used at capacity until additional competent personnel is recruited for anesthesiology.

The Commissioner acted on the recommendation of Dr. Joseph F. Fazekas, Gallinger chief of staff. Dr. Fazekas said the anesthesiology department has been hampered by inadequate and changing personnel.

The present department head, Dr. Samuel F. McCarran, leaves this week and no replacement is in view. Dr. Fazekas said, "We need a new department head very badly and I hope we can get a salary reclassification so that the pay will go up to $8000 a year.

The chief of staff is planning to recommend two Georgetown University School of Medicine graduates for one-year appointments as anesthetists. Two more residents in the field and four nurse anesthetists will also be appointed shortly, he said.

At present, the department has only the retiring department head, two nurse anesthetists (one of these is on vacation) and one resident in anesthesiology.

In addition, Dr. Fazekas is concentrating on improvement of the X-ray department, which needs personnel and equipment, and the present laboratory. A new structure is underway for the laboratory.

The plans for the surgical suite expansion called for expenditure of about $285,000 for construction and $88,000 in equipment to add five operating rooms on both sides of the present surgical facility on the sixth floor of the surgical building.

Gravel Strike May Impede Building Here

A slowdown in the construction industry or a rise in construction costs here will result from a scheduled strike Monday of Smoot Sand and Gravel Co. employes, industry officials said yesterday.

Approximately 120 AFL operating engineers and 40 AFL truckmen plan to strike against the company at 7:30 a. m. Monday. They are seeking a pay increase of 25 cents an hour.

Because the Smoot concern is the largest supplier of sand and gravel in this area, an effective strike will hit the construction industry almost immediately. Smoot supplies more than half the ready-mix companies, which combine cement with the sand and gravel to make concrete.

Postponed a Week

The truckmen and engineers—who operate the firm's barges, tugs, steam shovels, cranes and other equipment—had planned to strike last Monday, but held off for a week pending further negotiations.

Industry officials said housing construction, relatively free from strikes this year, would be hurt by the Smoot strike as well as commercial construction, which has had several walkouts of AFL crafts this summer.

AFL plasterers now are out on strike. They quit work 10 days ago seeking a health and welfare fund.

Other Strikes Recalled

Construction work will slow down in the wake of the Smoot strike, industry officials said, because of the lack of concrete. They could buy from out-of-town sand and gravel companies, but that would increase building costs because of the expense of hauling.

The operating engineers and teamsters conducted a six-week strike against the Smoot company in 1946, settling for an average increase of 18 1-2 cents an hour. The gravel workers also went out on a long strike in 1939.

More Needed Here

Family MDs Praised by D. C. Doctor

Washington is "top-heavy with specialists" and the return of the family doctor would benefit both the public and the medical profession, in the opinion of one prominent physician here.

The Nation's Capital has only about 325 general practitioners out of 1600 doctors listed with the District Medical Society, Dr. James A. Gannon, former president of the Academy of Surgery here, declares in an article in the August issue of the Medical Annals, the society's monthly publication.

But, Gannon predicts, "the family doctor is on his way back." It will be a good thing, he says, because:

"The trained, educated, experienced general practitioner of today is capable of diagnosing and successfully treating 85 per cent of the illnesses which befall the human race. He knows his limitations and will seek counsel about the other 15 per cent. He has the opportunity to know you and your family and your idiosyncrasies. He will be interested in you, and you cannot have a better guide, philosopher and friend."

As to the reason for Washington's preponderance of specialists, "Mr. John Q. Public is largely to be blamed," the 65-year-old one-time chief of staff and chief surgeon at Gallinger Municipal Hospital writes.

"People are generally better informed today than they used to be. Newspapers and magazines print many detailed articles on medical subjects, and the lay reader acquires a little knowledge but has no medical education background which is necessary for full understanding.

"When such a person becomes ill, he attempts to diagnose his ailment and goes directly to the specialist who he thinks can help him. He should, of course, consult a general practitioner, who can first decide upon the necessity for special treatment and who can direct him to the appropriate specialist, but he is too smart to do this."

Dr. Gannon likewise criticizes discrimination he said is practiced against general practitioners by many hospitals.

"The attiude of many hospitals must change in favor of the general practitioner," he declared. "Hospitals in the main are conducted by lay boards who are advised by attending specialists. Rules are promulgated which restrict the activities of the general practitioner. Certain hospitals do not allow him to practice obstetrics.

"Any doctor who is allowed by his license to practice his profession should be able to treat any condition of which he feels himself capable in all hospitals."

Plan Weighed For Improving Negro Health

Appointment of a second District assistant health officer responsible for development of preventive medicine among Negro residents is being considered by Commissioner Guy Mason.

Mason revealed he is weighing the idea, which has been adopted by Kansas City, Mo., to improve health conditions.

The position would be filled by a Negro if the plan is adopted, Commissioner Mason said. Before placing the proposal before the Board of Commissioners, Mason stated he would discuss it with the city's new health officer, Howard University and civic groups.

No action will be taken until a successor is selected for Dr. George C. Ruhland, health officer, who is scheduled to retire in October.

Mason will meet with the committee named to submit candidates for the Ruhland post on September 8 at 8 p. m. in the District Medical Society building.

Passersby Nab Youth Fleeing With $45 Loot

An armed youth, who outwitted two customers before holding up a laundry last night, was captured by two civilians as he attempted to flee with $45.

Victim, police said, was Mrs. James Cox, 31, 507 Seward square se., agent for the Blue Laundry at 1402 Rhode Island ave. nw. She told police a young man pointed a gun at her, seized the money, and started to flee south on 14th st. nw.

She followed him out the door and screamed at passersby to catch him. Two of them did. They were Floyd Terslen, 2424 14th st. nw., and James W. Fredricy, 1311 14th st. nw.

Police took a loaded 32-caliber automatic pistol of Italian make from the youth, who said he was from Phoenix, Ariz. He was held for investigation.

Heart Failure Tentatively Ruled In Garage Death

A tentative certificate of death from congestive heart failure was issued yesterday in the case of Joseph Shurden, 42, of 4018 Georgia ave. nw. He was found Friday in his auto inside a garage near his home. Doors of the car and garage were open and the motor was running.

Dr. Richard Rosenberg, deputy District coroner, said after an autopsy that he found evidence of carbon monoxide in Shurden's blood. He said he will stay issuance of the final certificate pending outcome of chemical tests.

County to Cite School Gains in Race Suit Trial

The Arlington County School Board expects to answer the charge of race discrimination in its schools with evidence of improved facilities when a test suit on the charge is aired soon.

The test suit, brought two years ago on behalf of Constance Carter, then a 15-year-old student at Hoffman-Boston School in Arlington, charges educational facilities there are not equal to those at Arlington's white Washington-Lee High School.

It is slated to be tried in Alexandria Federal court on September 6. Mrs. Eleanor Taylor, who filed the suit for her daughter, Constance Carter, asks the court to compel the county School Board to provide equal facilities at Hoffman-Boston or admit the girl to Washington-Lee.

Lawrence Douglas, former Arlington Commonwealth's Attorney who represents the school board and co-defendant William A. Early, superintendent, has released a statement by the board pointing out that Hoffman-Boston has received conditional State accreditation since the suit was filed. Final accreditation is expected next year.

The board's statement also points out that a new elementary school is to be built adjacent to the school this year, releasing more space for high school classes. Plans also are being drawn for a new gymnasium, industrial arts shop and cafeteria at the school.

Leon A. Ransom, named by the National Association for the Advancement of Colored People to represent Miss Carter, has taken issue with the board's statement, however.

"We're highly in accord with the plans of the new school board," he said, "but plans for tomorrow don't satisfy demands of the child of today. We want the schools to open September 6 with absolute equality."

The Arlington board contends, however, that "it is the fixed and determined policy of the public school system of Arlington . . . to afford equal opportunity and facilities" for both races. The board said that any disparities between white and Negro school facilities are caused by the "tremendous differences in the number of white and Negro children in the county."

Runs Into Law

Man Jailed, Then Charge Is Decided

Nephew Flannigan, 34, of no fixed address, put police into a quandary yesterday. They had him securely locked in jail, but couldn't decide what charge to place against him.

He was seized yesterday morning by two military policemen at the Greyhound Bus Terminal, 11th st. and New York ave. nw. The soldier-cops had heard screams, which they hurried to investigate, and they said Flannigan ran right into their arms.

The screams, police found, came from Mrs. Lois Porter, 22, an attractive redhead who was dressed for the warm day in a halter and shorts. She had been seated in an auto nearby. She told officers she saw Flannigan walk by twice and stare at her.

The next she knew, he was beside her in the auto, she said, pressing what appeared to be a pistol into her side. He started to warn her not to move and not to scream, but he hadn't finished speaking, she said, when she cut loose with screams. A warning to "shut up," she said, redoubled her screams. Then, she said, Flannigan ran.

Police couldn't decide what was Flannigan's purpose, whether an intended robbery, assault, or what. They said they found a cap pistol in his pocket. Hours later, they settled on a charge against him:

"Making threats in a menacing manner."

Arlington Reports 11th Polio Case

Arlington County's 11th polio case was reported yesterday when a 15-year-old boy was admitted to Gallinger Hospital.

The boy, who lives in the 1100 block of N. Aberdeen st., was reported to be suffering from bulbar polio, the most serious type of the malady.

One hundred and six cases of polio have been reported by Greater Washington health authorities thus far this year.

The totals recorded by subdivisions are as follows:

District—41.
Prince Georges County—28.
Montgomery County—14.
Arlington County—11.
Alexandria—6.
Fairfax County—6.

Owner Captures Man After Fight In Closed Cafe

A restaurant owner battled a former employe he surprised in the establishment after closing time early yesterday for nearly half an hour before subduing the intruder and holding him for police.

George Saslaw, 27, of 2633 Connecticut ave. nw., said he surprised the man when he returned to his Crosstown Restaurant at 3102 Mount Pleasant st. nw. about 4 a. m. to pick up a supply order list.

During the struggle, he heard two other men run from the back door, he said.

The former employe, Joseph Lorenzo Sewell, 35, of 920 3d st. nw., was booked by police on a housebreaking charge.

Half an hour later, police picked up another man, identified as William R. Minor, 24, of 437 K st. nw., in an automobile containing whisky said to have been stolen from the restaurant. Minor also was charged with housebreaking.

Wins Shooting Award

Frank T. Hames, Civil Service Commission employe, of 301 Elm ave., Takoma Park, Md., has won a gold watch for markmanship at Camp Lejeune, N. C., where he is training with Washington's Fifth Infantry Battalion of Reserve Marines.

Man, 38, Stabs Wife, Drops Dead in Street

George Howard, 38, 25 7th st. se., fell dead to the sidewalk yesterday morning, seconds after police said he had plunged a 12-inch kitchen knife into his wife's chest.

Howard died of congestive heart failure, and his wife of eight months, Alice, 40, is in critical condition at Casualty Hospital.

Police first learned of the case at 8:30 a. m., when they found Howard unconscious two blocks from his home. At the same time, they were told to investigate a stabbing at the 7th st. address. Pvt. Randall C. Degges found Mrs. Howard lying on the parlor couch, coughing blood.

Degges said the woman told him this story. Early in the morning, Howard accused her of doping his drinks. They quarreled. Howard then ran to the kitchen, returned with a long knife and stabbed her. He then jumped from the first floor window and raced up the alley, Mrs. Howard told Degges.

Less than two blocks away, Howard was seen to collapse by William Casey, 724 6th st. se., who called police.

Deputy Coroner Christopher, J. Murphy performed an autopsy on Howard later in the day and issued a certificate of death from natural causes. Murphy said Howard died of congestive heart failure caused by acute dilation of the heart. The deputy coroner said the autopsy revealed a lung abscess and quantities of pus in Howard's chest.

Mrs. Howard's daughter, Mrs. Chaney, 724 11th st. se., said Howard had worked only occasionally since the war, when he was employed as a printer. Since then, he had occasionally worked on huckster trucks, she said. He was found clad only in pants, without shoes or shirt.

Mrs. Howard worked as a clerk in Peoples Drug Store, at 14th and U sts. nw.

Barbiturates Sought in Body Of Fire Victim

Carl L. Euren, who died Friday after being found on a burning couch in his apartment, had carbon monoxide in his blood and second and third-degree burns on 75 per cent of his body, an autopsy showed yesetrday.

Dr. Richard L. Rosenberg, deputy District Coroner, said he is holding up issuance of a certificate of the cause of death pending outcome of a chemical analysis for possible barbiturates in Euren's system.

The retired Government employe was found in his fourth-floor apartment at 1900 H st. nw., after Dan Sullivan, a visiting New York fireman, saw smoke and called a janifor. The latter admitted Sulli van who put out the fire in the couch before District firemen arrived.

Arlington Approves Borrowing Plans

The Arlington County Board yesterday approved borrowing of $2,350,000 to finance county operations pending receipt of taxes through this year.

The board authorized the county treasurer to borrow $1,350,000 for expenditures and also approved a recent school board action in borrowing one million dollars to finance current school projects.

The borrowing was authorized to expedite projects which otherwise would have been delayed until county revenue has been collected.

The board deferred action on a petition calling for a public referendum on a proposed $2,325,000 bond issue for a new sewage treatment plant. Action was delayed pending a report by County Manager A. T. Lundberg on the feasibility of combining the county's water and sewage services into a single department.

The board took under advisement a request from Edgar Pumphrey, County Republican leader, that voting machines be rented for the November general election. Pumphrey, who appeared before the board, said that the coming vote on a proposed constitutional amendment possibly would require the use of a 10-foot ballot, since the law demands that the amendment be printed on the ballot in full.

$3-Million Issue

Fairfax Vote Tuesday on Sewer Bonds

By Richard L. Lyons
Post Reporter

Residents of Fairfax County's Sanitary District No. 1 will make a three-million-dollar decision at the polls Tuesday.

They will decide whether they want the county to issue that amount in bonds to obtain their own sewer facilities. The bond issue would be repaid within 30 years or less.

If the bond issue is voted, here is how the money will be spent:

Purchase of a Federally owned trunk sewer, built during the war for more than $2,000,000, $500,000; construction of a sewage treatment plant, $1,105,000; installation of about 44 miles of subtrunk and collecting sewers, $1,138,000; acquisition of sewerage facilities installed by private developers in new communities, $117,000; purchase of equipment, technical services and interest payments, $140,000.

About 1000 Votes Expected

About 1000 votes are expected to be cast at the polls, from the thickly settled eastern section of the county extending southeast from Falls Church to the Potomac River. The area has a population of about 25,000.

James J. Corbalis, county sanitary engineer who has spent two years working up the program, feels that the bond issue will be approved. He calls it essential to the health and orderly development of the district.

He lists two compelling reasons for voting the bonds:

If the county doesn't buy the Government's trunk sewer, it may be sold to a private concern charging higher rates to make a profit.

If the county doesn't build a treatment plant, the State Water Control Board may halt further building in the disrict.

In recent months the State board has showed signs that it finally means to get tough about enforcing a three-year-old law that forbids an increase in the volume of raw sewage discharged into the Potomac River. It had previously closed its eyes to violations—which occurred every time a new subdivision hooked onto the trunk sewer—presumably to give counties time to arrange for building treatment plants.

The State has recently told both Fairfax and Alexandria, however, that treatment must be provided for any further increase in sewage.

There has been no organized opposition to the bond issue in the district itself. Loud protest has come from Falls Church, however, which will not vote in the referendum, but which is interested in annexing part of the district.

If the bond issue is voted, it would be defrayed by a district tax of 20 cents a $100 assessed valuation on all properties.

In addition, a monthly service charge will be collected from properties connected with the system. Connecting fees of $3 a front foot, minimum of $150 and maximum of $300, and special contracts with other communities also would reduce the total debt.

Voting will be conducted from 6:30 a. m. to 7:30 p. m. in the following precincts: The Lick (Idylwood Grocery); Falls Church No. 1 (Jefferson Village Pharmacy); Falls Church No. 2 (Idylwood Grocery); Annandale (Office of Columbia Pines); Baileys (Baileys Firehouse); West End (C. N. Cockrell's store); Pullmans (Happy Valley Community Hall); Groveton (Penn Daw Firehouse).

Only persons living in portions of these precincts within the district may vote.

Building Code In Arlington Faces Revision

Arlington's building code is due for the first major overhauling it's had since it was adopted in 1935, Building Inspector Andrew Jensen said yesterday.

Although a few amendments have been tacked on to the code over the years, it is in need of revision to bring it in line with recommendations of the National Board of Fire Underwriters, the National Building Officials Conference and the new Virginia State Fire Safety Code, Jensen said.

Members of the Northern Virginia Builders Association and of county architectural and engineering groups will be asked to comment on proposed revisions before they are adopted, he explained.

He estimated the new code should be ready by "late fall," following a public hearing as required by law.

Chief Puts 'Live Performance' As Goal of District Guard

By V. R. Montanari
Post Reporter

Back in 1927, a newly commissioned second lieutenant in the Idaho National Guard's 116th Cavalry was placed in charge of a badly needed recruiting drive.

There was no war in the air then, and pacifism and prosperity were rampant. Even a costly recruiting drive wouldn't bring in many men.

So the lieutenant decided to do it another way. He spoke quietly to two or three men who worked with youths and had the respect of youth, one a college football coach. He persuaded them to join up.

At the same time he built up guard activities, pride in the outfit and military bearing.

Builds Reputation

The 116th soon built up a reputation. The college coach and other key recruits talked it up. Within six months the troop's complement was filled and there was a waiting list.

The Idaho lieutenant of 1927 is now 53-year-old Brig. Gen. William H. Abendroth, commander of the District National Guard. In his new post he plans, he says, no drastic reorganization, but hopes to make membership in the guard a privilege.

"I want to have the best guard in the United States," he told this reporter, as he proceeded to outline some of his ideas. As commander of the District of Columbia Guard, he is looking for "live performance rather than dead compliance." To achieve this, he already has begun a policy of consulting his subordinate officers on decisions.

"I believe in having you come in and sound off about any plans being considered," he has told them. He tries to let his officers know what he's thinking about, because "they can't work intelligently unless they are kept well-informed."

He believes in placing as much responsibility as possible on officers and non-coms, because, he says, that is "the only way to develop good leaders."

Since enlisting in the Idaho Guard as a private in 1913, Abendroth, whose father was a regular Army cavalryman for 30 years, has held all the grades up to his present one.

He saw active Army service on the Mexican border in 1916-17, and again as first sergeant in an engineer replacement division in France during World War I.

Between wars, his civilian career included five years in the Idaho State government as budget director, purchasing agent and claims examiner, and two years as rural electrification manager for the Idaho Power Co.

He was recalled into the Army a third time—as captain—several months before Pearl Harbor. He came out a colonel in 1946 with the Legion of Merit for exceptionally meritorious service in the Southwest Pacific.

Most of his World War II duty was as provost marshal and headquarters commandant for the IX Corps in Hawaii, the Philippines, Japan and the United States. His Pacific Theater ribbon carries a battle star for Leyte.

After World War II, he was appointed adjutant general for Idaho and was Federally recognized as a brigadier general in that post in October, 1946. Shortly before that he had been named Idaho State selective service director.

Then came the Army assignment that brought him to Washington, to work on the General Staff Committee on Policy for the National Guard and Reserve, working under the Secretary of the Army and the Chief of Staff.

Among the general's other qualifications are his rating as "excellent horseman," received on graduation from the Fort Riley (Kan.), Cavalry School in 1930, and his rating as "expert" with the pistol—both mounted and unmounted—the rifle, the submachine gun and the carbine.

He, his wife, who has long shared his interest in horses and horsemanship, and their 7-year-old son, William H. Abendroth 3d, live in a home they have purchased at 315 South Ivy st., Arlington.

Capt. Kendall, Navy Balloon Expert, Dies

Capt. Charles H. Kendall, one of the Navy's outstanding free-balloon experts in the early 1930s, died yesterday at the Naval Medical Center at Philadelphia.

Capt. Kendall

Memorial services will take place at the Naval Air Station at Lakehurst, N. J., at 2 p. m. Monday. When he became ill two months ago, he was chief of staff there, and had served a number of tours of duty there earlier. Burial will be later, at a time yet to be set, at Annapolis, Md.

Born in Baltimore, in 1904, Captain Kendall attended Baltimore City College and the Army-Navy Preparatory School there. He received his appointment to the Naval Academy from the Sixth Wisconsin District. He remained at the academy for a time for special instruction, and then joined the USS Mississippi, serving until 1931 as an aircraft spotting officer.

He was then transferred to Lakehurst, where he became a full-fledged balloonist by 1933, piloting the free balloons that the Navy was using. He served as aide to Comdr. T. G. W. Settle in the international balloon race that year, coming in second to the Polish entry. Later, he made a number of successful competitive flights as chief balloon pilot in this country, and in an international competition in Poland in 1934, came in second to the Polish entry again.

From 1935 to 1937, Captain Kendall commanded an award-winning antiaircraft gun crew on the USS Indianapolis. He was back at Lakehurst from 1937 to 1939, then he entered the destroyer service.

He later went back to Lakehurst, and by 1944 was executive officer of the station. In late 1944 and 1945, he commanded the USS Wedderborn, a destroyer, in operations against the Japanese in the Philippines and the western Pacific, being decorated several times for valiant service with that ship.

He returned to Lakehurst in 1946 as chief of staff.

He was married in 1938 to Miss Boudinot A. Oberge in a socially brilliant wedding at Bryn Mawr, Pa.

Besides his wife, he is survived by two sons, Charles, jr., 10, and John, 6. He was the son of the late Henry S. and Emilie S. Kendall of Baltimore.

Col. Smith received the Distinguished Flying Cross, Purple Heart, Air Medal with oak leaf cluster and other American decorations. His foreign decorations included the Order of Nichan-Iftikan of France and the Order of the White Double-Headed Eagle of Yugoslavia.

At the time of his death, he was assigned to the special activities wing of Bolling Field Air Force Base, and served on Defense Secretary Johnson's committee of facilities and services of the Joint Chiefs of Staff.

Col. Smith was born in Arcadia, Fla. on Jan. 18, 1900. He enlisted in the S. A. T. C., University of Florida, in 1918, later transferred to Georgia School of Technology, from which he was graduated in June, 1923, with a B.S. in civil engineering and second lieutenancy, Air Service Reserve.

Beverly M. Gaddis Is Buried; Insect Pest Control Expert

Funeral services for Beverly Marshall Gaddis, 58, a leader of the Department of Agriculture's fight against destructive plant insects, were held yesterday at the Rock Springs Congregational Church in Arlington. He was buried in National Memorial Park.

Mr. Gaddis

Mr. Gaddis, who lived at 6713 N. Washington blvd., Falls Church, died of a cerebral hemorrhage in Arlington Hospital Thursday night.

A native of Suches, Ga., Mr. Gaddis was graduated with honors from the South Georgia State Agricultural College at Douglas. He taught school in his home State and later worked with the Georgia State board of entomology before entering Federal Government service in 1929.

Early in his Federal career Mr. Gaddis led the successful fight to keep the Mediterranean fruit fly from spreading north of Florida. In 1930, Mr. Gaddis was sent by the Department of Agriculture to the lower Rio Grande River Valley as associate plant quarantine inspector to help quarantine the Mexican fruit fly.

In 1934, Mr. Gaddis became the leader of the Division of Domestic Plant Quarantines and remained at that post until his death. He built up an international reputation for his ability to set up and direct pest programs of an emergency nature.

In that work he fostered control programs for the Midwestern grasshopper invasions in the early '30s, the white-fringed beetle, the phony peach and peach mosaic disease, the citrus cankers, and other plant destroyers.

He leaves his wife, the former Claudelle Lewis of Uvalde, Tex.; four sons, Dr. Don A. Gaddis, Paul L. Gaddis, Marshall L. Gaddis, and Earl L. Gaddis, all of Arlington; a daughter, Mrs. G. E. Kardos, Charlottesville, Va. and three brothers, M. F. Gaddis, Quitman, Ga.; M. W. Gaddis, Panama City, Fla., and Carl Gaddis, Lafayette, La.

Negro School Plan in South Heads for Test

Baltimore, Aug. 27 (AP).—The 14-State agreement setting up regional schools for Negroes in the South apparently is headed for its first court test here.

Six Baltimore Negroes have filed petitions seeking to force the professional schools of the University of Maryland to act on their applications for admission.

In asking the Baltimore City Court to dismiss the suits, Attorney General Hall Hammond of Maryland yesterday argued the "regional compact" arrangement gives three of them the right to attend schools of equal standards in other States at no additional expense.

Hammond said the needs of two other petitioners can be met at Maryland State College, the university's branch for Negroes at Princess Anne, Md. The sixth Negro, he said, is eligible for a State scholarship to Xavier University's School of Pharmacy at New Orleans.

The issue involves a doctrine laid down by the Supreme Court of the United States. That body has ruled a State must admit Negroes to its public schools or provide separate ones as good.

The regional-compact idea was suggested as a plan whereby the Southern States could pool their cash support to set up regional professional schools which would match standards of the State universities. Negroes, thereby, could be kept out of the State universities.

Partial Approval For New District Engineers Given

Proposals by the Washington Chapter, American Institute of Architects, and the Washington Building Congress for expansion of the District Inspections Department have been approved in part by city officials.

Lieut. Col. Thomas J. Hayes, 3d, Assistant Engineer Commissioner, said the Commissioners will be asked to include funds for employment of additional engineers and clerks to process permits in the 1951 fiscal budget.

A proposal by the Congress, however, for appointment of a supercoordinator to expedite movement of permit applications was rejected by the Engineers Department as impractical.

Sub Blast's Heroes Heading for Home

Hammerfest, Norway, Aug. 27 (U.P.).—The United States submarine Tusk, shepherded by a Norwegian destroyer, left this port for home today with the "brave mates" who survived both explosion and tragic rescue in storm-lashed Arctic seas.

The tusk arrived in Tromsoe tonight with survivors from the Cochino. It was escorted by a Norwegion patrol vessel. The United States Destroyer Samuel M. Roberts is expected to arrive Sunday to take aboard the survivors. They will head for home Monday.

The new snorkel-type, United States submarine Cochino, Lieut. Comdr. Rafael Benitez, skipper, was sunk by a series of explosions in the battery room in icy northern waters Thursday. Seven men from the Cochino and Tusk were drowned in the rescue.

"Most Dangerous Job"

"Every man showed outstanding bravery during the rescue operation. But some of them must be cited for exceptional heroism," Benitez said.

Comdr. Robert K. R. Worthington of the Tusk said the rescue was the "most dangerous job" he had ever experienced.

Five men were burned i. the explosions, one seriously.

The Tusk and the Cochino were on maneuvers when disaster struck. One-thousand-pound lead sulphate type batteries, which can give off highly volatile hydrogen fumes when they are being charged, were in the battery room.

The first explosion was just after the Cochino reached the undisclosed rendezvous spot with the Rusk, Benitez said.

"The first explosion did not damage the Cochino so severely that an abandon-ship order had to be given. I decided to transfer only part of the crew to the Tusk, which arrived shortly after the explosion," he said.

The Tusk maneuvered close to the Cochino, so close that the pounding waves sent the two subs crashing together from time to time.

The first group of men to be transferred climbed into a rubber dinghy, Benitez said.

Man Blown Into Sea

It bounced like a cork on the waves.

"One man was blown into the sea," Benitez said.

"He was saved by men from the Tusk and given first aid, but while this was going on, a huge wave took him and 12 others and swept them into the sea.

"Six men from the Tusk were rescued, but the technician from the Cochino (civilian radio technician Robert W. Philo of Newark, N. J.) and six from the Tusk were drowned."

Worthington, of Oakmont, Pa., described the rescue in detail. Lines were tied around the men of the Tusk so they could be pulled back. They dived into the water between the two submarines to grab those who had been washed overboard. They were in constant danger of being crushed between the two vessels. They rescued six.

Some hours later, Benitez said, another explosion rocked the Cochino. This time he ordered the submarine abandoned, Worthington said Benitez, a native of Puerto Rico who served in the Pacific during World War II, was "critically burned."

"We then used a makeshift gangway, a small wooden plank. It was too short to keep the two ships from ramming together. But all of the Cochino crew, even Lieut. Comdr. Wright (his executive officer), who was severely burned, got across.

Men Run to Safety

"It wasn't possible to help the men as they made their dash to safety. As the two ships hit the bottom of a wave, one man would run across the narrow plank, and, on the next wave, the next man would go."

Wright is believed to be the most severely hurt of the five who were burned.

Going back to the rescue in mountainous waves, Benitez said:

"Raymond G. Sugar, an excellent swimmer, jumped into the sea to save the first man to fall into the water.

"Lieut. Comdr George Cook, executive officer of the Tusk, went overboard to save Philip Pennington."

Worthington paid tribute also to Cook, who later maneuvered the Tusk while he directed the gangplank rescue.

"H. H. Rouch from the Cochino saved J. E. Morgan," Benitez continued, "while Norman Walker Jumped in to save another man."

Worthington said Walker, a torpedoman, third class, could not swim, but insisted on saving a shipmate. He jumped overboard with a line around his waist.

When the last man was aboard the Tusk, the Cochina went down, the submarine headed for the closest port, Hammerfest, 175 miles from the Russian frontier and 265 air miles northwest of the Soviet naval base at Murmansk.

(The two undersea vessels were accompanied by the subs Toro and Corsair, the Associated Press said.

(Comdr. S. V. Storheill of the Norwegian Naval High Command said there was no reason to be surprised at the presence of United States ships near Norway's Artic coast.

("We kne wabout it long in advance," he said. "It is only natural that they want to train their crews under those coinditions." Comdr. William Porter, United States attache in Hammerfest, said the Cochino was on a "routine cruise outside of Norwegian territorial waters.")

Albanians Aid Greek Rebels, Athens Says

Athens, Greece, Aug. 27 (U.P.).—The Greek general staff, in its first detailed report on recent Greek-Albanian border clashes, charged tonight that Albanian infantry and cannon troops had given all-out support to Communist guerillas in the Vitsi border area.

A special communique said Albanian soldiers "between August 10 and 15 assisted the Vitsi guerilas with all means at their disposal."

The communique said the Albanians had moved an infantry regiment and 12 cannon companies up to the border on the night of August 10 and told them "their mission was to give all possible help to the Greek guerrillas and to cover their flanks."

Earlier today, another general staff communique announced that the region between the Haliakmon and the Sarandaioros rivers in the rugged Grammos mountain area had been cleared of guerillas.

British Anxiety Mounts Over Money Talks Here

THE WEEK IN HISTORY

By Arthur Schlesinger, Jr.

Pulitzer Prize Winning Historian and Associate Professor of History at Harvard

AS BRITAIN'S dollar and gold reserves continued to trickle away, aggravating Britain's financial anemia, officials in London looked ahead with mounting anxiety to the international monetary talks planned for Washington early in September. In the meantime, both British and American officials carried on an entirely futile game of maneuvering for position through the newspapers.

The designation of Treasury Secretary John Snyder as chairman of the conference filled the British with intense gloom. Their objection was twofold.

On the one hand, they felt that the selection of the Secretary of the Treasury rather than the Secretary of State would narrow the scope of the talks to technical financial issues and thus exclude attempts at a broad-gauged solution. On the other hand, they felt that, even for a Secretary of the Treasury, John Snyder was hardly notable for boldness or imagination—an impression shared by many Americans.

The result was a pointless press campaign against an American decision that was not likely to be reversed. American officials, for their part, continued to blame everything off the record on London's resistance to devaluation or on British welfare policies.

The Opposite Extremes

BUT this irritability on both sides was largely irrelevant to the great issues which would confront Snyder and Dean Acheson, Sir Stafford Cripps and Ernest Bevin. For it seemed clear, even at this stage, that the conference could not produce a miraculous settlement of the British crisis—even if it resulted, as some Englishmen wistfully hoped, in an unconditional American subsidy for the sterling bloc; even if it resulted, as some Americans sternly insisted, in the devaluation of the pound or the denationalization of Britain's socialized industry.

An unconditional subsidy, of course, was inconceivable in view of the present temper of Congress. As for the devaluation panacea, much favored by the Treasury, ECA Administrator Paul Hoffman expressed a divergent American view last week when he deplored the "great tendency to look on devaluation as a cureall for everything." As for British socialism, which many right-wing Americans had enthusiastically blamed for Britain's crisis, the Economist of London, an influential anti-Socialist weekly, argued in a trenchant editorial that British trade policies were "imposed by the facts of the case," not by Socialist ideology.

Yet, if it seemed clear that there were no quick solutions, it seemed equally clear that the United States could not afford to let Britain collapse. Something would certainly be done. But, judging from the preliminary sparring, observers feared that it would be done by the Americans with the worst possible grace and received by the British with the greatest possible rancor.

Charwoman Plenipotentiary

IN THE meantime, the battle of the notes continued to rage over eastern Europe. The Soviet government threatened resort to what it darkly called "other more effective measures" than it had hitherto used to protect its interests in Yugoslavia; and Pravda said that Tito and his gang must sooner or later "pay with their heads for the crimes they have committed against the camp of socialism."

Reports from Berlin indicated extensive Soviet security measures along the Iron Curtain line. The Russians even practiced such refinements of political warfare as delivering their notes to the charwoman of the Yugoslav Ministry of Foreign Affairs at 5 in the morning.

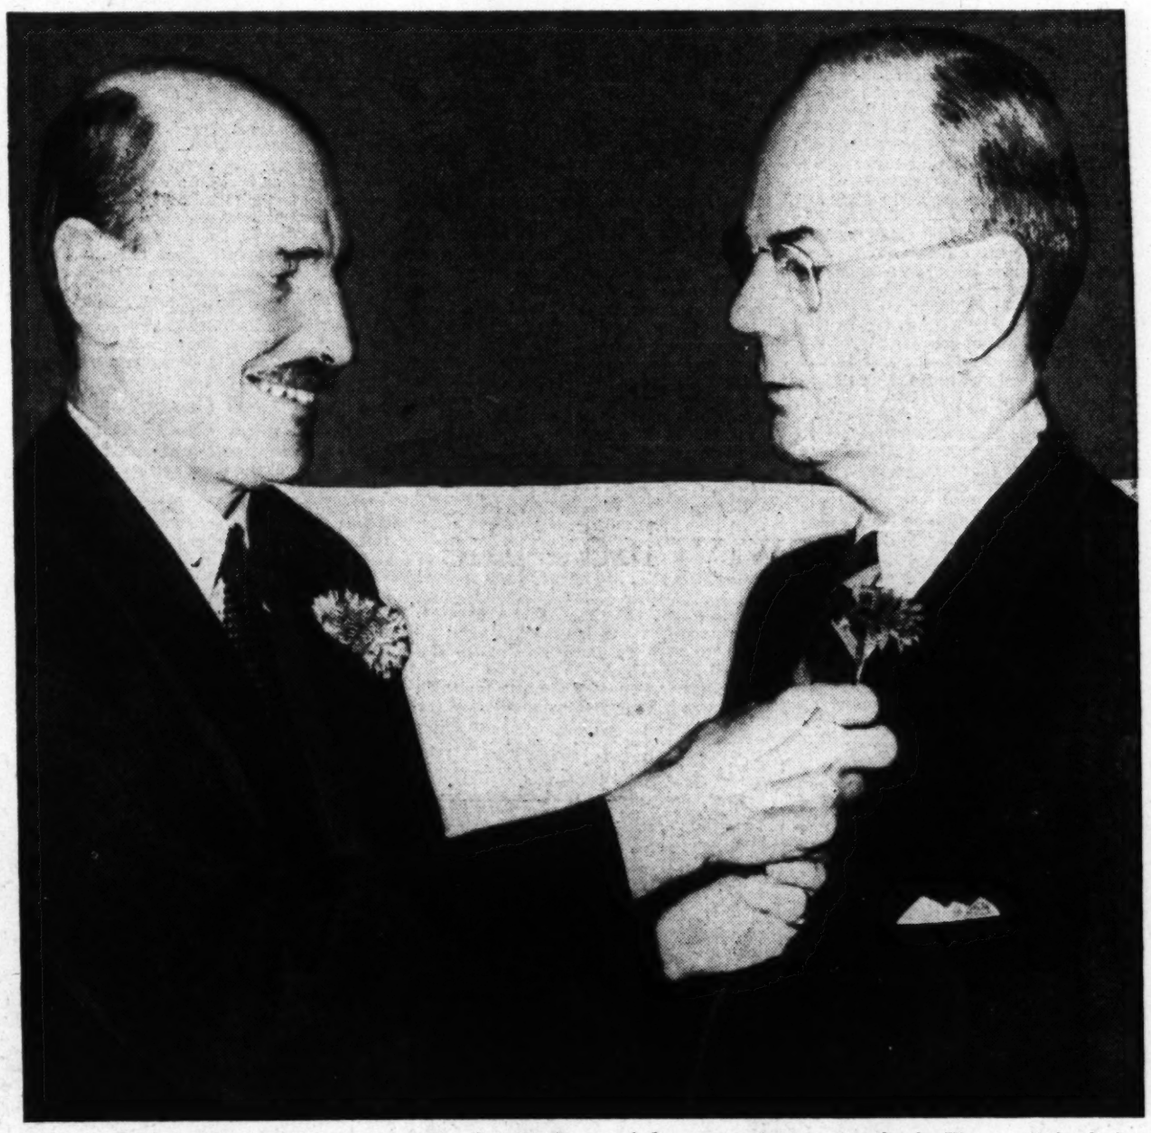
But Tito boldly continued his names-will-never-hurt-me line. It did not look for the present as if Stalin intended to move on to sticks and stones, except for the possible instigation of guerilla activity in Yugoslav Macedonia. Moscow, indeed, was beginning to suffer from repercussions of the campaign. As Dean Acheson pointed out, the Soviet belligerence against Yugoslavia made it difficult for Communists and fellow-travelers to sustain their so-called peace offensive in the west.

In Berlin, a dissident Communist faction proclaimed its opposition to "imperialist Bolshevism" and its support for Tito—a brave gesture somewhat impaired by the arrest of its leaders by the French a few days later for unauthorized political activity.

In the meantime, American politics continued bogged down in August mire. The Senate refused to adjourn September 30 and refused to concur in a 26-day recess for the House. Senator Lucas pressed his fight to get the displaced persons bill out of a committee controlled by his own party.

A top Navy Department official was revealed as the author of an anonymous document filled with insinuations against the Secretary of Defense. The Hoey committee continued to unearth squalid facts about the friends of General Vaughan.

On the other hand, Cardinal Spellman, who had said a few weeks ago that he would never publicly recognize Mrs. Franklin D. Roosevelt again, called upon her at Hyde Park. And the Federal Communications Commission banned give-away programs—an action that from the viewpoint of many listeners was no more an infringement of free speech than the prohibition of pornography.



Clement R. Attlee pinned a flower on John Snyder's lapel when the British Prime Minister and the United States Treasury Secretary met at a Savoy Hotel luncheon in 1947. Snyder was in London for the meeting of the World Bank and International Monetary Fund. There will be little tossing of bouquets by either side when Snyder opens international monetary talks here with Sir Stafford Cripps, Chancellor of the Exchequer, and Foreign Minister Bevin

Is Stalin Pulling Punches?

STALIN'S quarrel with Yugoslavia's Tito may have gone far beyond anything Stalin expected. In the last notes the two exchanged are ideas that make it look as though the quarrel has grown much bigger than the two-nation squabble it started out to be.

It started a year ago with the Cominform (the Communist Information Bureau) reading Yugoslavia out of the inner party ranks for "deviating" from the party line.

Dispatches from Belgrade then said Tito had rebelled against what he seemed to think was a Moscow plan to keep Yugoslavia a raw-material supplier to other Soviet satellites which got the go-ahead for factories. Tito wanted factories, too.

Suddenly, this month, Stalin and Tito descended to name-calling.

A week ago the Cominform repeated a year-old suggestion that Moscow supporters in Yugoslavia either "compel their leaders to admit their mistakes" or "remove them and put forward new leadership of the Communist Party of Yugoslavia."

This was a call for overthrow of the present Yugoslav government, and the world press so recorded it. The world press reaction must have struck home in Moscow, because Stalin's next note devotes several paragraphs to explaining that the Communist Party never takes "forcible" action.

In many more paragraphs he labors the point that the mere asking of Yugoslavs to change their leadership was no bid for "forcible overthrow" of the government.

Washington experts think that Moscow's head men must be having the jitters over the effect this idea of tossing out Tito may be having on premiers in the other satellite capitals—on Gottwald of Czechoslovakia, Beirut of Poland, Rakosi of Hungary, for example. All were tapped for their jobs just as Tito was.

Moscow must remember with uneasiness the fact that many of the old non-Communist governments of middle Europe changed in extremely abrupt fashion after World War II—so abrupt that "forcible overthrow" was the label pinned on the events by much of the world.

Tito's latest answer to Moscow, published last week, seems to say that in the weird shadow world of communism, events are strengthening his hand. He finally told Moscow that he would stand for no interference, either at home or in foreign policy.

That's about as far as a former Moscow wheel-horse can go in declaring independence.

A group of German Communists has notified Tito it is ready to help "fight the imperialist Bolshevism" of Russia. Experts here think Stalin could end up by splitting the Communist world and building up a new leader—Tito. (Also see story by Edwin D. Gritz on page 2.)

Italian Count Runs 'Welfare State'

By Frank Gervasi

Post Reporter

VALDAGNO, ITALY.—This tidy town of 14,000 inhabitants in Italy's industrial north is a monument to what enlightened capitalism can achieve.

Here an Italian industrialist, Gaetano Marzotto, has proved that private enterprise can provide jobs, decent housing and social benefits for thousands of workers and still show a profit.

COUNT MARZOTTO

Valdagno, unique among Italian communities and rare in all Europe, has conquered poverty and subdued the common housefly. Either achievement would mark it as unusual.

Valdagno's housewives shop in super markets where they can buy DDT and where the meat is stored in electric refrigerators. The town has a nursery for the preschool age children of working mothers, a prenatal clinic, a maternity home, an old folks' sanctuary, a sleek stadium, a symphony orchestra, an indoor swimming pool with heated and purified water, a hotel for visiting big shots and another for plainer people. The shops are as well-stocked as the best in Milan or Rome.

It would be nice, at this point, to be able to say that the town's good health, good humor and prosperity were achieved through the miracle of the Marshall Plan, i.e., with American taxpayers' money. But not so. Valdagno's economic and social progress is attributable solely to the courage, initiative, imagination and hard work of Gaetano Marzotto, Count of Valdagno and Castelvecchio, a tall, burly, somewhat imperious man in his late 50s with a strong, Roman nose, restless dark eyes, Mephistophelian brows and apparently unlimited resources of money and energy.

Always in Motion

MARZOTTO personally runs an empire of woolen mills, marble quarries, industrialized farms, tourist hotels, fish hatcheries and a dozen other, minor enterprises. He likes fast cars, speedy boats, duck-hunting and eighteenth century paintings. He seldom sleeps twice in the same bed, so busy is he moving from one project to another.

He dislikes yes-men, Communism, laziness, stupidity and inefficiency as much as he likes good food, good wine and work. He believes with Latin passion that Communism cannot be conquered with slogans but only with a positive policy for preventing unemployment and poverty and providing workers with those social amenities essential to their physical and spiritual welfare.

Here in Valdagno, whose woolen mill employs nearly 6000 men and women, Marzotto has created those working, living and recreational facilities which he considers necessary for prosperous and peaceful labor-management relations. Marzotto has had only one 24-hour strike since his mill resumed postwar operations. Production here and in his factories in Pisa and Manerbio is breaking records at nearly 50,000 yards of cloth a day.

Marzotto's record in Valdagno, where a Communist is almost as rare now as a housefly, inspired a visiting American ECA officials to remark that "if Italy had a hundred like him, this country would not need Marshall help."

No less an antagonist of capitalism than Giuseppe Di Vittorio, boss of the Communist Italian Workers Confederation, was recently obliged to acknowledge that Marzotto had cut the ground out from his union in the Valdagno area.

"Let us hope," he told a large gathering of factory workers and farmers, "for success of the noteworthy enterprises of Count Marzotto. If they succeed, we who are revolutionaries can say to other industrialists and great landowners: 'You, too, should do what Count Marzotto has done and it is your obligation to invest your capital and use it for the well-being of society.' Then, if they should refuse, we would be obliged to do it ourselves."

10 Months to Think

THE labor leader spoke at ceremonies celebrating completion of a new Marzotto project at Villanova combining intensive agriculture with industrial activities. The Count, like generations of Marzottos, is a manufacturer. But his real love is the land.

He thought long and hard about the plight of Italian agriculture during nearly 10 months passed in the Alps back in 1943-44 while hiding from Fascist and Nazi pursuers. When he returned to his mills and properties, he had a plan. He put it to work in 1945.

A farmer, he figured out, only worked 180 days a year. The rest of the time he was idle and hungry. Marzotto determined to solve this seasonal unemployment by creating industries which would use products grown by the farmer—himself. Then the farmer could work half the year in the fields and half in the factories.

Back in 1935 he had bought about 6000 acres near Valdagno. On this land Marzotto put into operation the bold plan he had perfected while in hiding.

Marzotto built an entire new town and called it Villanova. He put farmers, accustomed to living with pigs, chickens, cows and oxen, into big double houses with 10 rooms and two baths to each family.

Each house had a good-sized garden for vegetables and flowers. All animals were housed in a central barn. The pig pens, built of easily cleaned concrete, were at a healthy distance from the houses.

Feet Out Of Grapes

HE worked other miracles. He replaced the peasants' oxen with tractors. He took the contadino's feet out of wine making. The wine of Villanova is made in a modern factory with all the latest crushers, hydraulic presses, retorts, fermentation vats, pumps and siphons. Marzotto even induced the peasant to discard his flail in favor of a threshing machine and exchange his sickle for a mechanical mower.

The Villanova industrial center contains a sugar factory which will process not only all the beets grown on the Santa Margherita acres, but a lot more besides. So that beets can be stored until the farmers are ready to leave the fields and become wintertime factory workers, they are dehydrated.

There is a modern linen mill. Santa Margherita farmers are encouraged to grow flax, adding a new crop to their list and tapping a new source of income.

To provide milk and cheese at reasonable cost for all his estimated 15,000 employes, Marzotto installed a dairy capable of processing the output of his own herds, numbering about 1400 head, and the product of the neighboring countryside. The dairy waste goes to the piggery.

Marzotto spared no expense to prove his thesis that brains and hard work could do at least as much for Italy's recovery and toward winning the battle against Communism as gifts and loans from America. He had a dozen prize bulls flown in from Canada and some 300 cows shipped from there to revitalize his Holstein-Frisian herds. He bought other prize cattle from Switzerland. He sent a crew of textile technicians to the United States to bring back know-how, and dispatched farmers to Canada to learn husbandry.

Trading With Texas

TO provide work for surplus labor in nearby towns like ancient Concordia, once the home of the arrow makers of Roman legions and now a hotbed of Communism, Marzotto added a cotton mill to the Villanova plant. Many of the bales in the warehouse were labeled "Texas" but were bought with Marzotto dollars earned by the sale of wool cloth in the United States, not with Marshall money.

He used his own money, too, for one of the most ambitious of the multitudinous Marzotto projects . . . a land reclamation scheme at Zignano, not far from Villanova. Loans for such projects should be easy to obtain, but the count encountered more red tape than he thought necessary. He went ahead on his own. Pumps and dredges work night and day to salvage 750 acres from the salt marshes, and Marzotto is paying the bill.

The reclaimed land at Zignano will be washed with fresh water to remove the salt and then will be farmed and turned into pasture. He has surplus property landing barges ready to transport his herds to the several islands which will be created in the marsh. Tests are under way to determine what grasses and plants will thrive on the new soil.

In all Marzotto enterprises, industrial workers are responsible for 1800 hours of work a year. Their pay is reckoned on that basis rather than on the 40-hour week, because, says Marzotto, "holidays, absences due to illness or family reasons cut the theoretic 2080 hours a year down to 1800 anyhow."

"In our plants, a worker may work eight, nine or ten hours a day—and get bonuses up to 35 per cent for increased output—but his basic work year is 1800 hours. I believe that a worker should have the maximum possible time for vacations, medical attention, entertainment, travel and education. He cannot have it on the 40-hour-week basis.

"Besides, if production is carefully planned on the 1800-hour system, overtime is obviated, more jobs are created and labor, able to take time off without loss of income in slack times, becomes more efficient."

Luxury For 60 Cents

MARZOTTO has not neglected workers' needs at holiday time. He has built vacation centers in the mountains and at the seashore. All his employes receive a minimum of three weeks' vacation, with pay. They may go either to the seaside or the mountains in clean, modern hotels where four meals a day are served to adults and five to children. The cost is less than 60 cents a day per person and everybody sleeps on rubber-foam mattresses!

Marzotto's executives admitted that maintenance of the count's welfare state is expensive. But they insisted that, not counting capital investment for buildings and equipment, the various nurseries, clinics, company stores, schools and vacation camps involved pay for themselves. Here and there, they said, there are deficits. These are paid by Marzotto when the books are balanced at year's end.

None knows or is willing to estimate the size of Marzotto's fortune. But is is no secret that he keeps the over-all books himself. The accountants of the different mills and farms keep the books of the individual enterprises and periodically report to the count. Only Marzotto knows whether his empire is making or losing money.

Asked why he works as hard as he does and why he invests so much money in improving workers' conditions, he replied:

"It's good business, for one thing. But then, too, when I die I want it said of me that I did some good on this earth. Besides, I want to show those numskulls down in Rome—and the skeptics abroad—that some Italians are efficient.

"I want to make democracy work. That's the only real way to beat the Communists."

10 Years After, the World Is Split on New Rocks

By Sigrid Arne
Associated Press Newsfeature Writer

ON A Sunday morning 10 years ago—September 3, 1939—Britain and France formally announced that they were at war once again with their old enemy, Germany. Today, a decade after the outbreak of World War II, the peoples of the world are split again.

Before the war, the split was between democratic and Fascist nations. Now it is between democratic and Communist nations.

The western democracies hoped the United Nations would work for the benefit of all. But before a U. N. police force could come into being—there still is no such force—Communists overthrew the governments of Poland, Czechoslovakia, Romania, Hungary and Bulgaria.

In the U. N. the Russians voted "no" almost without a break on all actions which the rest of the member nations approved. Slowly it became clear that the Russians were determined to abide by no decisions of the majority. They refused, too, to join U. N. agencies aimed at bringing higher living standards to the world—the World Bank and Fund, the Food and Agriculture Organization, the Refugee Organization.

Europe's reconstruction problems were getting nowhere so fast that her Communist parties were growing. The United States stepped into this picture in June, 1947, with a promise to aid Europe if the Europeans took steps to help themselves. This was the Marshall Plan, operated by the Economic Cooperation Administration. It was offered to Russia, but Moscow refused the aid and pulled her satellites out behind her.

The aftermath has been the berth of several non-Communist agreements, all aimed at trying to achieve economic health and military safety for the world's democratic people.

The Marshall Plan went into effect in April, 1948. It meant American gifts of around five billion dollars each year for four years to 16 western European nations while the Europeans repair war damage and find markets for what they make.

But Europe's military fears were not allayed by the Marshall Plan. Beyond the Russian borders, said intelligence reports, lay a Russian army almost up to wartime peak.

Out of these fears grew the Brussels Pact of 1948. It bound together Britain, France, the Netherlands, Belgium and Luxembourg for 50 years. They promised to stand together if any one were attacked. Their military leaders have spent the past year fitting their defense plans together.

Then came the North Atlantic Pact, in April, 1949. It bound together 12 nations: the five Brussels powers plus Canada, Denmark, Iceland, Italy, Norway, Portugal and the United States. Again, these 12 nations promised to come to each other's aid—even though it may not be armed aid—if any of them are attacked.

Throughout all the postwar talks there have been many suggestions that western Europe can no longer exist as small pockets of nationalism; that its future would be both richer and safer if there were a United States of Europe.

That idea blossomed into the Council of Europe, now meeting in Strasbourg, France. Leaders from 12 nations are exploring the means by which Europeans can erase the barriers between them.

Again the Brussels powers are present, as well as Denmark, Greece, Eire, Italy, Norway, Sweden and Turkey.

OEEC An Advance

SOME little start had already been made at tying together Europe's economic life. This grew out of United States demands that Europeans tie their economic plans together as much as possible to fit in with Marshall Plan aid.

The Organization of European Economic Cooperation is a continuing committee of the 16 nations getting Marshall Aid. The Europeans tell each other the extent of their needs, their production plans, their foreign sales and purchases. Out of this comes the final request for Marshall aid.

ECA experts feel that OEEC debates have gone a long way toward drawing Europeans closer to each other. But there is still much top-level dissatisfaction with European attempts to work together.

The actual start of the American drive to stop Communist grabs of other nations came in March, 1947. President Truman asked Congress to vote funds for the help of the non-Communist governments of Greece and Turkey. Congress agreed. The Communists in those nations lost their gamble.

A year later the Italian Communists lost their gamble at the polls. Again much credit was given to the promise of American aid—which then had not even started to flow to European docks. French Communists lost large chunks of their membership, too, once Marshall aid began to arrive.

But the east-west struggle had cut the old trade routes between the bread basket of middle Europe and the manufacturing cities of Western Europe. Western Europe had to turn to American and Canadian markets for grain.

No Solid Legal Ground

ALL of these postwar struggles have had to be waged on the uncertain sands of a world in which no real peace treaties have been written.

There are no treaties for Germany and Japan. There is no final settlement for Austhia, which was never accounted a real enemy. Nor is there a plan for Korea, which became a prisoner of Japan two decades before World War II.

Last year east-west struggles over Germany became so bitter that the western Allies had to fly supplies to 2,500,000 citizens of the western zones of Berlin at a cost of millions a week. The Russians had stopped Allied use of railroads and highways into Berlin.

Several attempts have been made by the Big Four—the United States, Britain, France and Russia—to settle Germany's future. All have failed so far except that early this summer Russia agreed to reopen the land routes to Berlin.

Finally the Western Allies had to make separate plans for western Germany. First, they tied together the area's trade, and now they are ready to free the Germans to run their own democratic government, starting in September.

There is still little talk of a peace treaty for Japan. Japan is still run for all practical purposes by the Allied military commander, Gen. Douglas MacArthur. But the nation lives under the increasing shadow of the Chinese Communists forging farther southward on the Chinese map.

Breakup of Empire

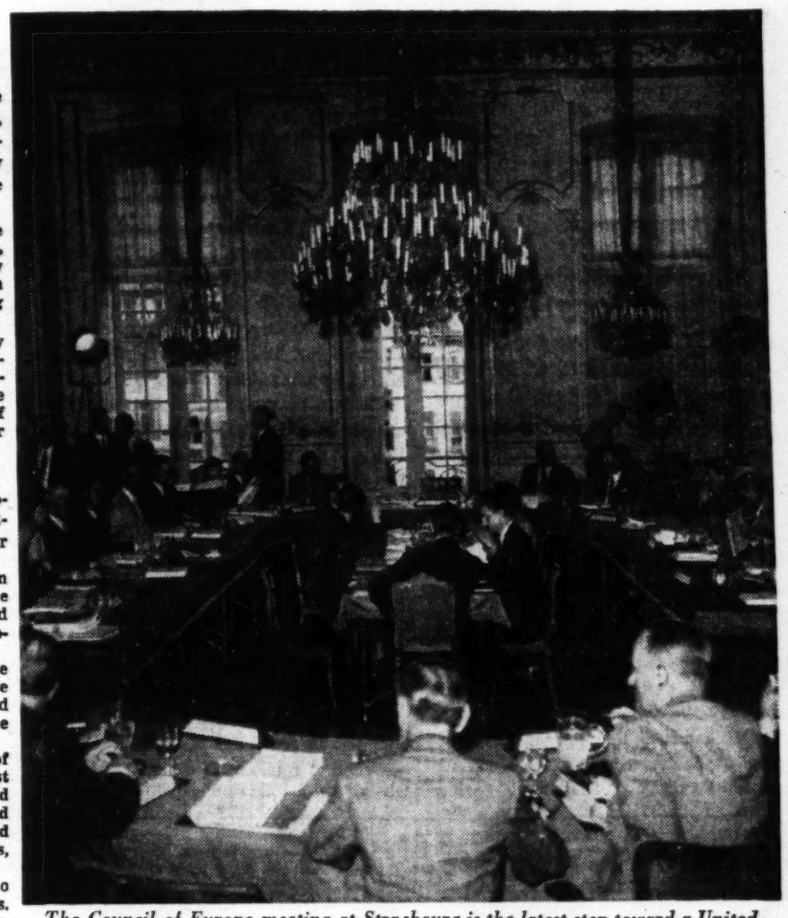
AWAY from the beachheads where democrat and Communist have met in postwar tussles, many nations have moved closer to the western ideal of self government.

India and Pakistan gained their freedom from the British but chose to stay with the British Commonwealth. So did Ceylon and the Malay States. Burma broke loose entirely.

The Philippines gained their independence from the United States. Iceland cut loose from Denmark. Israel was born and gained U. N. membership. Indio-China is on the road to independence from the French.

The result has been a tremendous shift of world power, much of it still unsettled. Most importantly, Britain is no longer the world banker. The United States is. Germany and Japan are cashiered as world powers, and Russia has become, with the United States, a contender as most mighty.

Over the world, governments have had to shift their policies to meet their changes. As the tenth anniversary of the war nears, the shifts are still taking place.



The Council of Europe meeting at Strasbourg is the latest step toward a United States of Europe. The council is shown in session in the Strasbourg City Hall

Eye-Catching Booklets New Blow at VD

By David Taylor Marke
AP Education Writer

NEW YORK.—You walk into a beauty parlor and there, staring you in the face, is a face on a little pamphlet asking, "You're pretty, but is your beauty only . . . skin deep?"

You walk into a bar, and again you find a little pamphlet, in a sympathetic shade of blue: "Worried? Take a look at the facts . . . Worrying won't help!"

No matter where you go—at agricultural fairs, in factories, at the movies, sports arenas, race tracks, restaurants—you'll probably find a little pamphlet asking, "We're healthy . . . Are you?"

The catchy little pamphlets go on to tell you what syphilis is, what it can do to you, how you can recognize it and what you can do about it. They are part of a series being prepared by the Communication Materials Center of Columbia University Press.

It's a new project which, in cooperation with the Public Health Service, is assisting State and city health authorities in their efforts to get John Q. Public into the fight against venereal disease. About 300 cities are waging campaigns against the dread disease, and most of these are using the materials prepared by CMC, a nonprofit organization.

CMC came into being by popular demand, says Erik Barnouw, its supervisor. "Last year the Public Health Service asked the Columbia University Radio Bureau to help out in the current VD campaign with some radio transcriptions. We prepared some dramatic programs, a lot of hillbilly stuff, and so on, which went over with a bang. When the various health services started their 1949 VD campaigns, they demanded similar materials, and so the center was started."

In addition to the pamphlets, the CMC has prepared radio shows, films, music, posters, leaflets and comics. Each kind of material is prepared by the best available talent. Radio transcriptions star such luminaries as Norman Brokenshire in 10-to-15 minute shows, and James Farley, Tex McCrary and Jinx Falkenberg, Lou Little and Drew Pearson in spot announcements. A 5-minute fight film, "The Big Fight," stars Joe Louis.

CMC also distributes a 30-minute documentary film, "Feeling All Right," which was produced by Southern Educational Film Production Service. "It's beginning to catch on in commercial theaters all over the country," says Barnouw.

A special baseball booklet called "Facts" has been produced. In it are the National and American League schedules and pertinent data about baseball. Of course, interspersed are some hard facts about VD. Similar editions are planned for football and basketball.

"In this fashion," comments Barnouw, we'll be able to reach all kinds of people who ordinarily would not see our materials."

CMC is about ready to release a new song for jukebox and disc jockey consumption. "Experts are predicting," says Barnouw, "that the public is going to take this over and make it a hit for its own sake, which would be news for a message-record."

It's called "That Ignorant Cowboy," and goes in part like this:

"An ignorant cowboy went on a spree
And oh what an ignorant cowhand was he.
He had a few drinks and his head was a-whirl
And he ended up in the arms of a girl
Called Katey — —
That ignorant cowboy
That ignorant, ignorant cowboy."

Siamese Women Rebel At Inferior Status

BANGKOK (AP).—How can Thai (Siamese) women be considered as having equality with men when the males are permitted to have more than one wife? So asked Nang Nantaka Suprabhatanand, former chairman of the Women's Law Association, amid the cheers of the Thai Women's Association.

The woman attorney said Thai women legally have equal rights but nature and tradition militate against attainment of this equality. She said it probably would be impossible to pass a law to change the marital situation, but it was fortunate that the cost of living these days obstructs most men from having more than one wife.

The law recognizes three types of Thai wives: legally registered, semiwife and servant wife. Women have the right of divorce, she commented, but she did not favor use of this legal weapon except in extreme cases. Nang Nantaka also criticized the law that gives the husband power to handle his wife's property. She said women who had their own careers outside the home should be allowed to manage their own property.

Tito Isn't the Only Perverse Minion

By Edwin D. Gritz
Post Reporter

PERSISTENT but generally unpublicized political perversity and economic sabotage in satellite states is reported to be giving the Kremlin as much if not more distress than the ballyhooed break with Marshal Tito of Yugoslavia.

Observers here point out first that the mere existence of a fissure in the Kremlin's monopoly control of world communism has already punctured Soviet propaganda that Stalinism is inviolate. This, plus the screeching nature of Stalin's rift with Tito, is said to have caused a serious loss of prestige for the Soviet Union, particularly within its eastern European orbit.

As a result, local Communists in the various satellite states are reported to be more outspoken in bucking Stalin's policy of shifting political power to imported Communists who have spent most of their lives in Russia. At the same time, home-grown Communists are said to be markedly reluctant to campaign any further for a belligerent, all-European form of communism along the lines established by the Cominform at its inception in September, 1947.

Local Communist leaders, it seems, are reasserting their previously quashed complaints that they had risked their lives in national underground movements for many years only to be shunted aside when Moscow took over after victory was achieved.

Given a Voice

ALTHOUGH the Kremlin is undeniably still well in control of this situation, there is said to be increasing evidence that Soviet leaders have been forced to ease up on their political reins to avert more serious defections.

This has been done, it is reported, by taking local Communists into counsel more frequently and by agreeing both to modify economic demands and to slow down Sovietization programs somewhat. The point in view, of course, is to curry favor with large segments of citizens still reported hostile to communism.

A notable example of the Kremlin's new policy toward the satellite states is the case of Vice Premier Hilary Minc of Poland, chairman of the Economic Committee of the Council of Ministers and chairman of the State Planning Commission. Powerful exponent of good trade relations with the West, Minc was suddenly summoned to Moscow, reported "on leave" amidst rumors of a falling out, and then returned to office June 28 with what is said to be a free hand.

The Minc case is especially significant, observers point out, because he has always espoused a slow and cautious policy of farm collectivization as well as a more judicious approach to nationalization of business and industry.

Costly Sabotage

SOVIET leaders and their Warsaw puppets have also been forced to become more conciliatory because of an admittedly serious campaign of economic sabotage perpetrated both by anti-Communist citizens and political dissidents in and out of the Communist Party.

Although much economic sabotage is effectively hushed up, particularly in industry, available information indicates that Poland is undergoing a long siege of it. As recently as June 25, Warsaw openly admitted "large scale" losses because of sabotage.

One report from Poland states that economic sabotage caused losses exceeding six million American dollars during a recent six-month period. During this time, the report also reveals, Communist leaders urgently called upon trade union members "to sharpen search for anti-state agents in industry."

Other reliable sources reveal that "no less than five persons" were executed, three were given life imprisonment and more than 70 were sentenced to long terms in the past few weeks for all kinds of sabotage as well as bribery and corruption. Many of those convicted, the report states, were disgruntled Communist Party members.

The seriousness of economic sabotage is further indicated by such recent public appeals in the press as that of Polska Zbrojna, which declared: "Economic sabotage is an offense that strikes at the most fundamental interests of the People's State. The enemy is acting. We must therefore sharpen our vigilance."

Berlin Reaction

EQUALLY persistent economic sabotage is reported in Czechoslovakia despite the vigilance of the Moscow-trained Communists in power. And since both states are vital industrial adjuncts to Soviet economy, Moscow's concern is said to be particularly great.

A sudden upsurge of sabotage and anti-Communist activity is reported to have occurred in Czechoslovakia immediately after Russia lifted the Berlin blockade. The outbreaks, it appears, resulted from a general feeling that Russian weakness had been unmasked by the airlift and thus that expressions of defiance were in order.

The unsettled situation of April and May apparently was also used for blows against the Communist government by organized underground groups. A recent dispatch from Prague relates that one such underground band was discovered, resulting in the arrest of about 1600 persons. Investigation showed, it is said, that this band was led by former Czechoslovakian military leaders.

As to the extent of anti-Communist activity in Czechoslovakia, one recent report reveals that there are at least 48 illegal underground organizations now active. Other recent reports tell of the bombing of the Communist party secretariat at Hradec Kralove, of an attempted derailment of a train carrying party delegates to a Communist congress in Prague and of railroad bridges being blown like that at Presov.

Probably the most revealing indication of anti-Communist persistence in Czechoslovakia is the fact that security measures have increased in the past six months. Not wholly satisfied with the reliability of the National Security Police (SNB) or even the Military Counter-Intelligence (OBZ), the Communist - controlled government has directed more power to the State Secret Police (STB) as a result of a complete reorganization last January.

Crops Are Targets

WHILE reports of economic sabotage and anti-Communist activity are even more fragmentary from the other satellite countries, it is known that Romania, for instance, has practically eliminated travel permits in the country for all except the most trusted Communists. Furthermore, new security decrees were issued last month to contend with reported sabotage of railroad lines, factories and particularly farm crops and tractor stations.

Recent reports from Hungary, like those from Romania, contain many references to open resistance by peasants, enforced days off from factory work because of unexplained "breakdowns" and trials of engineers and factory managers for "allowing" sabotage or for participating in schemes to break down production programs.

In Bulgaria, Vice Premier Vulko Chervenkov provided illuminating emphasis on the need for antisabotage efforts in a talk quoted July 23 in the Rabotnichesko Delo. Berating the "atmosphere of unjustified complacency" in local branches of the Communist Party as well as in the Fatherland Front, he declared in part:

"Hostile elements have appeared in various places and even tried to take the offensive. Here and there small clashes have occurred."

Charging that these elements have been "encouraged from abroad," the vice premier demanded more vigilance against spies and saboteurs, emphasizing particularly that considerable agricultural machinery has been damaged and crops burned through lack of guards or guards who slept on the job.

To all this, incidentally, the ubiquitous Yugoslavs replied boldly and significantly in the July 25 issue of Borba that Chervenkov conveniently soft-pedaled the corrupt and "opportunistic attitude of the Bulgarian Central Committee (Communist) toward such enemies and their destructive actions in the work of the party and the Fatherland Front."

A Primitive People Remade

Mr. UNESCO Goes to Haiti . . .

By Louise Levitas
NYHT News Service

TEN months ago, the barefoot peasant farmers of Marbial—a corner of Haiti that had been hidden by mountains and practically isolated from civilization for almost two centuries—were abruptly introduced to the outside world.

The introduction surprised representatives of civilization, a team of UNESCO—United Nations Educational, Scientific and Cultural Organization—and Haitian scientists as much as it did the peasants. After plans for similar experimentation in China and East Africa had been revised and abandoned, Marbial remained as UNESCO's first actual test.

For the Marbial experiment the Negro republic of Haiti agreed to meet more than half the expense. Since the plan was first put into operation a primitive people, whose patois has only recently been recorded, have been learning reading, writing, sanitation, community living and modern methods of agriculture. In the process they are becoming modern citizens of the world. Evidence of their enthusiasm is in the birth records—18 new babies christened "Unesco."

A Practical Education

UNESCO teaches people by demonstration how to grow bigger and better crops, feed their children better, make their homes healthier—in general improve their standard of living. Instead of giving out money or food, it gives backward people the opportunity to help themselves.

This education theory seemed ideally suited to the job before Dr. Alfred Metraux, an American anthropologist working for UNESCO, was sent down to Haiti to survey the Marbial site toward recommending how the project should be started. When he and a staff of Haitians arrived on the scene the wide gap between theory and reality was instantly apparent.

They found the people on the edge of starvation. During the previous season, the rains had failed, the crops had withered, and the only food had been the seeds for the next planting.

Understandably, UNESCO's planners had not foreseen the special problems at Marbial. The valley, extending for some 17 miles along the River Gosseline—a torrential stream which practically dried up every year during the hot season—had only one part-time connecting link to the outside world. A dirt road led to a seaport town at the mouth of the river, but it became impassable as soon as the rainy weather set in. Then, Marbial could be reached only by foot travelers.

The river was the people's only source of drinking water. It was also used for laundry and waste disposal. The valley was thick with mosquitoes and disease—yaws, anemia, intestinal parasites. Every scientist was stricken with malaria.

Dr. Metraux recognized that the immediate need was not education but relief from the stark living conditions of the natives. Because of all the special problems and having only $26,000 for 15,000 to 20,000 inhabitants of Marbial, Dr. Metraux recommended that the UNESCO experimental site be changed.

But before the survey was finished, the peasants themselves, eager for any help in their misery, were crowding into the hut that served as surveying headquarters.

UNESCO, they thought, was probably a rich Haitian who wanted to spread his bounty—a perfectly logical idea for people who were not aware of other countries, much less other races. Maybe Dr. Metraux was Mr. Unesco.

"Tell us what to do," they begged Dr. Metraux. "We will do anything you want!"

When they were told that Mr. Unesco couldn't stay at Marbial because there was no suitable road, they volunteered to build one.

The 11-mile road was built with only rudimentary tools in a couple of months, the farmers joining together in each sector to take care of the stretch that ran past their farms.

A doctor, medical and agricultural supplies, books and teachers were brought to Marbial. The program of education had begun.

Lessons were simple. The peasants agreed when the scientists told them that their land was dying, for the harvest had been decreasing year by year. They knew something had to be done to save the soil. The scientists pointed a way.

Told of Co-ops

THEY told them first about cooperatives—how poor farmers could help themselves by working together.

In each sector, some peasants formed cooperatives to plant their crops, dig a community well, build a community center—all with their own free labor.

At UNESCO demonstration areas, leaders of each cooperative were trained in contour planting, ditchdigging, use of a compost heap, pruning of coffee trees, making a plant nursery. Then they taught their neighbors.

At the same time, lessons in health were being taught. Peasants were told why drinking river water made people sick, and how it was that the swamps bred malaria.

Since a peasant who knew a trade could become more self-sufficient than an ordinary farmer, the most popular classes offered by UNESCO were those in handicrafts.

All this learning has given the peasants larger ambitions. The cooperatives went on to install pumps for wells; they built a general store for the goods they brought together.

Now Marbial people want a hospital and a big school for their children—all of which they will have to build with their own money. They already pay for their children's schooling — 5 cents a month for each student, a high fee for these people. With such cooperation, the UNESCO project so far has spent only about $10,000.

On "Saturday night" in Haiti, this hand-hewn trough serves as a bathtub. Between scrubbings, it does duty as a washing machine, or even a kitchen utensil. In Marbial, the natives are learning sanitation from UNESCO

An Autopsy on an Airline Accident

By Capt. Ace Robson

R. C. "Ace" Robson is a "practicing" airline pilot with 10 years' experience in aviation, including a year in which he instructed Air Force cadets and six-odd years with American Airlines. He calls himself "a pilot who writes, and not the other way round."

AIRLINE accidents make for better headlines than those in other forms of transportation. Unlike railroads, ships and buses, however, many facts are never known to the public. This is not because of any desire for secrecy; anyone who is interested can possess all available information. But much of it is technical data, and in air laguage that doesn't make sense to the layman.

One can understand a highway bridge being washed out, or a rail switch being set the wrong way, or a ship running aground in a fog. Many words are written about the incident and eyewitnesses give their accounts, but somehow, after wading through all the first reports, one feels he knows nothing further than that some place there was a crash.

Just what does take place following one of these tragedies? Let's start at the beginning.

Wealth of Information

AS SOON as the first word of an accident is received, several groups simultaneously, but independently, start for the scene. These are the Civil Aeronautics Authority, officials and engineers of the company which owns the aircraft, engineers of the company which built the ship and the engineers and safety representatives of the Air Line Pilots Association. These men will set up a temporary headquarters, then get together and work for a solution.

The airline concerned will immediately collect all its records on that airplane, records of that particular trip (a duplicate set is always kept on the ground), pertinent data on the pilots and the ground personnel connected with the flight, statements from mechanics who had worked on the plane in the last few days. Weather reports are obtained from ground stations along the route as well as from other ships that were in the vicinity at the same time. In short, any useful scrap of information is soon on hand.

At the scene of the accident, several things are going on at once. Photographs are taken from the air as well as on the ground, including closeups from every angle and of all remaining parts. Observations from the air at the location of an accident in Kentucky about five years ago, showed trees and farm crops flattened in a wide swath for several miles, indicating that a small cyclone simply dragged the ship down.

Not so much as a single bolt may be disturbed until it is released by the CAA inspectors, unless, of course, it was immediately necessary in order to remove passengers or for reasons of public safety. Each part is labeled, if necessary, and its distance from a reference line is recorded. It then will be possible to draw a map showing the location of every available part as it was found, and many times this is of great value.

Telltale Bird Feathers

SOME years ago, investigators came upon a most peculiar clew in the wreckage of a DC-3 in Ontario, Canada. There was no apparent reason for the accident until some bird feathers were found, which led to the theory that a bird had shattered the windshield, stunning or seriously injuring the pilots.

This started a series of tests to see how much of a blow a windshield would take. Guns were actually used to shoot birds and other objects at panes of glass. Today pilots ride behind extra strong, double windshields, well braced in substantial frames. When a DC-6 ran into a severe hailstorm out West not long ago, the Ontario investigation paid off, for the inner pane of the new double windshield held after the outer one was demolished.

If any obstacles were struck by the airplane just prior to landing, it may be possible to establish the direction and angle of descent. To further learn this fact, any eyewitnesses are questioned. The testimony of eyewitnesses, however, unless they are aviation personnel, is generally of no use. The most anyone ever seems to see is a low flying ship with a sputtering engine that disappeared over the tree tops. In the early days of the air mail, an airport manager could keep track of his ship for many miles on a cloudy day by the stream of telephone calls from farmers, reporting an airplane that "fell just beyond the trees." Obviously, the pilot was just staying out of the low overcast and doing fine.

Once the line of flight is established, the bushes are literally combed for several miles along the route for anything that might be found. Most of the time this results only in a collection of assorted metal, well rusted by the years. But at Bryce Canyon, Colo., several years ago, parts were found along the line of flight, and their sequence gave some indication of the route of the fire on board the ship. In the case of a DC-4 at Bainbridge, Md., photographs of the duplicate of a missing part were sent to newspapers from Philadelphia to Baltimore. The accompanying story said that the part might be a clew to the disaster, and would the finder please turn it over to the State police. It was soon brought in.

Kinks Can Be Clews

WHEN the work in the field is finished, each part is reexamined. The characteristics of metal are well known to engineers, so that each bend or kink may reveal something about the stresses and strains that were put on it at the time of the accident. Cases sometimes rest upon the ability to distinguish between metal fatigue, failure due to abnormal stresses while in the air and damage caused by impact with the terrain.

A failure due to metal fatigue may have several origins—a flaw within the metal, a rough spot causing excess friction or an improper fit between two parts. One small scratch may be sufficient irritation to start the spread of a flaw, especially in moving parts working under a heavy load. Eventually the structure is so weakened that it lets go.

Radiating from the point of irritation may possibly be seen concentric rings, like the cross-section of a tree trunk, the surface of the metal usually worn smooth from vibration. At the time of complete failure, the tearing effect will leave the remaining surface so roughened that a clear line of demarkation may be seen. The periodic inspections required on aircraft are designed to catch fatigue in the embryonic stages. Scratches and points of wear have been aptly termed "engraved invitations to an accident," and it is well to get the invitation early.

Another important item is whether the engines had been cut prior to landing, and, if not, how much power was being delivered by them. This can be estimated closely by the degree to which the propeller blades were bent. Full power would tear the blades loose, or wrap them around the hub, while an idling engine would merely curve them. This question of power will indicate whether the pilot was intending to land, or struggling to keep his ship in the air.

Also, if one engine is found to have been at idling power and the othrs at full power, investigators could most surely assume that the idling engine was malfunctioning and was possibly a contributory factor to the accident.

The position of engine and airplane controls in the cockpit likewise may each reveal an important fact. Many of these controls have several normal positions, depending on the condition of flight. What will be normal for cruising will not be normal for descending. There is also a normal for different types of landings. If it can be learned which of these conditions the airplane was adjusted for, it may be a clew as to what the pilots were trying to do and therefore may be indicative of the trouble the ship was in.

Sparks Can Cause Fire

THE problem of fire may sometimes be cleared up by the appearance of certain parts. If, for instance, a burned piece is found a good way from the accident, it might be assumed that there was a fire before the crash and that fire might well be the cause rather than the effect. The position of the fire-fighting controls must be regarded with suspicion, for the pilot would most likely have turned on this equipment before landing, fire or no.

Incidentally, fire usually occurs because of gasoline coming in contact with the hot metal of the engines, or sparks struck at the time of landing, rather than from electrical apparatus being left on, as is generally supposed. One many times hears the statement that the pilot "cut the switches" before landing and so prevented a fire. He may have done so, but if there was no fire he was just lucky.

Fire was obviously the cause of a DC-3 accident several years ago, but the source of the fire remained a mystery. Close investigation finally located the point of origin in the tail, near the buffet (kitchen on board a plane). Airliners now have fireproof dishes and garbage receptacles so that the smoldering cigarette on the luncheon tray does no harm.

In order to get a clearer picture of what's what, a mock-up is sometimes made, using the remaining parts, or a large-scale outline of the ship may be drawn with sections blacked out to indicate lost or damaged parts.

Oxygen for Pilots

HERE are some other things that have been learned from investigations.

After some unfortunate DC-6 episodes, a superior fire-fighting and warning system was installed. From another case came an oxygen system which prevents the pilots from being overcome by carbon dioxide extinguishers.

Several years ago in Dallas, a DC-3 was smashed up because a gas tank selector was set on an empty tank. Because of that, air transports must now have complete and separate fuel systems for each engine.

Investigation of an early model DC-3 accident in San Fransisco Bay brought to light an obvious, but until then overlooked, flaw. It was discovered that a microphone had dropped to the floor, become wedged in the control column mechanism and rendered the controls inoperative. This was corrected by simply covering all openings in the floorboards around controls.

There is, of course, a small percentage of accidents which are never solved beyond the proverbial "shadow of a doubt." "Probable cause" and "contributing factor" are the only decisions that can be reached in some cases. Yet this in itself may be of some good, for it keeps everyone on his toes, never completely satisfied with anything.

Records Sure to Topple at Air Races

By James J. Strebig

Associated Press Aviation Reporter

CLEVELAND—New speed marks are almost certain all through the National Air Races program here over the Labor Day weekend.

An unusually large field of planes has been "suped up" since last year, and a complete change in the courses eliminates right-angle turns. If the throttle benders get the right kind of weather, they should push up the records just on the basis of the faster courses.

All in all, the three-day program which will open next Saturday with a Marine airborne work assault on the huge stands at Municipal Airport, shapes up as the best spectator show since the postwar renewal of the flying classic in 1946. Speed qualifying flights will start next Tuesday.

There will be a distinct international flavor this year. The Federation Aeronautique Internationale, world body of sporting aviation, will have its forty-second annual conference during the races. It represents 32 countries, including Russia.

In addition, a Supermarine Spitfire has been entered by a Canadian Air Force pilot, the first foreign entry in the Thompson Trophy classic in 13 years. The Thompson carries $40,000 in prize money and is the world's fastest closed-course race.

An average speed of more than 400 miles an hour is likely this year. The record of 396 miles per hour was set by Cook Cleland in 1947.

THE THOMPSON COURSE, heretofore a 15-mile rectangle, has been changed to a seven-sided course. The race has been cut from 300 to 225 miles. The shorter distance and faster turns will add miles to average speeds.

What is more important, it means the Air Force will fly a jet or "J" division of the Thompson, using North American F-86 Sabres, the world's fastest fighter. The slower Lockheed F-80 Shooting Stars set the "J" division record at 515 miles per hour in 1946 and averaged 500 miles per hour in 1947. The "J" race was not flown last year. The Sabre holds the world record speed of 670 miles per hour, flying with full armament.

The Bendix cross-country race from California to Cleveland will be flown in both propeller and jet divisions. The propeller planes will take off for the first time in a race horse start from Rosamond Dry Lake. This means that the first man past the wire is the winner. With spaced starts in the past, the crowd learned about the winner from the loudspeaker. Contestants must report their positions over checkpoints at Colorado Springs, Colo.; Goodland, Kans.; Peoria, Ill., and Fort Wayne, Ind.

Paul Mantz, the fabulous Hollywood pilot who has won the last three Bendix races, has entered two planes but is not listed as a pilot. His ships will get plenty of competition from Joe Debona, who literally chased Mantz across the line two years ago. Debona flew his North American F-51 Mustang to a new transcontinental record for propeller planes at 490 miles an hour last March.

The Air Force will have a jet division of the Bendix with Republic F-84 Thunderjets, long-ranging 600-mile-per-hour fighters from Muroc Air Base. The Navy flew the Bendix last year. The record of 494 miles per hour was set by the Air Force in 1946 with F-80s.

Midgets Are Favorites

THE GOODYEAR RACE for midget planes looks like the best yet. The course has been shortened from 2 miles to 1¾ miles and changed from four legs to six. In addition, the course has been moved nearer the grandstand. The entry list for the $25,000 in prizes is larger than ever.

The midgets—they weigh up to 500 pounds—are favorites with the crowds. Although not so much for speed—they can get 200 miles per hour only down hill—they fly knee-high and depend on skill and daring as much as their engines.

The Navy has figured on only one competitive event, a jet race among fighters taking off from a carrier in the Atlantic. However, it will be on hand with a display of flying skill, topped by the Blue Angels doing precision acts in Grumman F-9-F Panther fighters. The Marines and the Air Force also will have four-man "aerobatic" teams.

New marks are likely for the Sohio and Tinnerman races. The entries will be made up of the 20 fastest qualifiers for the Thompson. Weakest spot on the program appears to be, as usual, the women's race.

The Allison jet race, originally from Cleveland to Indianapolis and return, has been changed to a low-level dash by Air National Guard F-80s from Indianapolis to Cleveland. The ANG planes will come from five cities—San Bernardino, Calif.; Lincoln, Nebr.; Bangor, Me.; Jacksonville, Fla., and Atlanta, Ga.

Prize money again totals $110,000. The military fliers, of course, get only glory for racing.

Centenarians Holding Last GAR Bivouac

By William L. Madigan

Associated Press Staff Writer

INDIANAPOLIS.—Five fragile centenarians assemble here today to sound Taps for the Grand Army of the Republic.

The aged survivors decided a year ago to hold their last encampment in the city which was host to their first convention 82 years ago. The encampment will be from August 28 to 31.

Two hundred eighty-eight young delegates from 11 States were on hand for the initial meeting November 20, 1866. No formal minutes of the gathering were kept, says Miss Cora Gillis, GAR secretary. She came here from Washington to make arrangements for the eighty-third annual meeting of the once-powerful organization.

The State of Indiana will be official host to the Civil War veterans and some 2500 members of five affiliated groups: The National Woman's Relief Corps, Ladies of the Grand Army of the Republic, Daughters of the Union Veterans of the Civil War, Sons of Union Veterans of the Civil War and their auxiliary.

The five surviving members of the organization which in 1890 boasted a peak membership of 408,489, planning to attend, are:

Theodore Penland, 100, Portland, Oreg., the national commander in chief; Albert Woolson, 102, Duluth, Minn., national chief of staff; Robert Barrett, 102, Princeton, Ky.; Joseph Clovese, 105, Pontiac, Mich., and James A. Hard, 108, Rochester, N. Y.

Clovese is the only living Negro member of the group. Hard, who is blind and deaf, is expected to be flown to the encampment.

Still hoping to attend is Charles R. Chappel, 102, Long Beach, Calif., who is reported recovering from injuries suffered in a fall from a peach tree.

Miss Gillis says there are 16 surviving GAR members throughout the country.

Stamp collectors and dealers will be on hand for the encampment, too. The first sale of the GAR commemorative stamp will be made Monday in special ceremonies at the base of the historic Soldiers and Sailors Monument.

An act of Congress will enable the Marine Band to play half a dozen concerts.

The Civil War veterans will be guests at a reception in the office of Gov. Henry F. Schricker on Monday. A twilight parade followed by a campfire will complete the ceremonies on Wednesday.

The GAR veterans will each ride in a separate motor car in the parade. When the vehicles reach a reviewing stand, they will be backed over the curb to give their passengers a vantage point from which to view the marchers.

Tiny Guam Is a Big Question Mark

By Vern Haugland

Associated Press Staff Writer

WHOM will President Truman appoint as the first civilian governor of Guam?

Is Congress going to give the Interior Department the money it asks to get ready to run Guam—thus closing half a century of Navy rule there?

Can a civilian administration avert a Guamanian depression, save the United States any money, get the Federal Government out of the island's banking, bus and newspaper businesses?

These are problems that make tiny Guam a question mark of the west central Pacific this year.

President Truman has ordered the Interior and Navy Secretaries to start "realistic planning" for the transfers regardless. The Secretaries agreed that Guam should pass into civilian control next July 1. Action for American Samoa and the trust territory—the Caroline, Marshall and northern Marianas Islands—will follow in a year or two.

Governor Retiring

BUT Guam's Navy governor, Rear Adm. Charles A. Pownall, is retiring September 1. Navy and Interior agreed that would be a good time for a civilian governor to come in and start building up a staff to take over next July.

Interior Secretary Krug asked for $715,000 to cover salary costs through next June 30 and the expense of planning and studies that must be made. A House committee objected to any such appropriation until legislation had been passed "for the orderly establishment of civilian self-government on Guam." The Senate has yet to consider the issue.

ADMIRAL POWNALL
. . . Retiring this week

James P. Davis, director of the Interior Department's division of territories and island possessions, says frankly he cannot estimate whether a civilian government would cost more or less than the present one.

The Navy estimated the cost of the Guam government for the fiscal year 1947-48 at $6,031,334. Indirect Navy contributions, such as handling communications, unloading ships and purchase and storage of supplies, cost an additional $2,427,032.

Bus Line a Lemon

AMONG the enterprises now operated by the Navy on the island are:

1. The Bank of Guam, capital assets almost 22 million dollars. The bank's revenue in fiscal 1948 was $421,812.

2. The island's only bus line. It has never been self-supporting. The Navy has completed or has under contract 110 miles of main roads and 100 miles of secondary roads.

3. An eight-page daily tabloid newspaper, the Guam News. It circulates throughout the trust territory islands—the Marianas, to which Guam belongs, the Carolines and the Marshalls. Its revenue in fiscal 1948 was $79,444.

The Interior Department is considering private ownership and operation of the three properties some time in the future.

"We have felt that it is better to go ahead and replace the naval administration as it now stands, without raising the question at all as to whether it is the most economic and most efficient organization that could be set up," Davis says.

"Within a year or so, when the naval establishment has been cut back and present contracts have been completed, the population of the island probably will have been reduced by 30,000 at least, through the departure of contract labor.

"We will be very much better off then to work out the exact form and size and cost of the permanent establishment."

Natives a Minority

GUAM'S population as of September 30, 1948, included 26,223 native Guamanians and 79,439 "nonresidents" divided as follows: Navy 11,867, including 1809 dependents; Marines, 5865; Coast Guard, 90; Army and Air Force, 19,856; contractor employes and Civil Service workers, 21,901; private business, 75; Filipinos, 19,114, Chinese, 376; others, 292.

The Guam government personnel totals 90 naval or Marine officers, 116 enlisted men, 103 mainland civilians and about 1200 Guamanians.

Guam's economy has been described by Navy spokesmen as "probably worse than at any time in the history of naval government" and "almost completely dependent upon naval activity." Much of the best land is retained for military purposes, and few Guamanians have returned to their farms despite copra prices as much as 20 times above prewar. The natives have taken to running little shops and cafes, taxi services and the like.

Guam, discovered by Magellan in 1521, was wrested from Spain in 1898. The only force required was the firing of several shots by the United States cruiser Charleston—shots mistaken by the Spanish officers on Guam for a salute.

Since its recapture from the Japanese in 1944, Guam has seen a considerable rebuilding of its towns, streets and utilities.

Navy Reconsiders

WHY not leave Guam under the Navy?

Up until a couple of years ago the Navy was tenacious in its insistence that it keep control over the island. Now, however, its official view is that it would be better all around for Interior to take over administration of Guam—but that the Navy should have substantial operating base areas.

Davis pays tribute to the Navy for doing a stand-out on Guam but contends:

"Our long-established national policy for all nonself-governing people that become subject to American jurisdiction is to give them the largest possible opportunities to develop democratic institutions and a degree of economic and political self-sufficiency.

"The Interior Department view is that you can't have a good government of civilian populations, under an American system, which is in essence a military operation."

Friendly Visit

No ship of the United States Navy has called at a Spanish port since the cruisers Augusta and Quincy visited Spain more than a decade ago. The mission of the Augusta and the Quincy was to evacuate American citizens imperiled by the revolution which Generalissimo Francisco Franco, aided and armed by the dictators of Nazi Germany and Fascist Italy, had fomented against the government of his country.

Next month, however, according to a Navy Department announcement, four warships of the United States, under the command of Admiral Richard L. Connolly, will pay a courtesy call upon the port of El Ferrol—known now as Ferrol-el-Caudillo, since it is the birthplace of Francisco Franco. Admiral Connolly says the visit has no particular significance, that it is just an ordinary call of the sort made every year by United States warships at the ports of friendly countries. Secretary Acheson says it has no political significance. It seems to us, on the contrary, to have great significance—and this, we suppose, is what has led the Spanish government to express satisfaction concerning it—significance of a most unfortunate and unhappy sort.

Equity Capital

In a memorandum prepared for the Senate Banking Committee, Thomas B. McCabe, chairman of the Federal Reserve Board, has analyzed the reasons for the inadequate supply of equity capital and suggested what he personally thinks should be done to stimulate buying of common stocks.

Until recent years Americans have not hesitated to take reasonable risks of loss by purchasing stocks in their quest of larger returns than could be obtained from comparatively riskless investments in high-grade bonds. That accounts in large part for the rapidity of our industrial growth and our high living standards. At times a shortage of savings has impeded the flow of equity capital into industry; but today the flow of savings is abundant, and the public is in possession of a huge volume of funds accumulated during the war and the postwar years. Why, then, do investors shun stocks? Mr. McCabe concludes that the chief reason is a desire for security and safety, reflected in the large volume of individual savings held in Government bonds, savings institutions, life insurance companies, pension and trust funds.

Second on his list of deterrents to purchases of equities is the increase in income taxes. The high rates applicable to the income groups accounting for a large proportion of savings reduce the incentive to invest in risk assets and increase demands for tax-exempt State and municipal issues and insurance policies. Another factor that accounts for the lack of interest in stocks is the fact that many companies retain a large proportion of their earnings instead of paying them out as dividends—a practice that is, of course, due in part to inability to obtain needed capital by stock sales. Finally, many potential investors, especially individuals who have only recently accumulated substantial savings, lack the knowledge needed to make wise decisions in regard to stock investments.

Not only is the investment demand for equities restricted for the reasons given, but equity offerings are limited because business concerns are able to obtain funds by borrowing at low interest rates, or by utilizing, cost free, their undistributed profits. The tax system, by permitting interest on debt to be deducted as a business expense in computing taxable income, while dividend payments are not deductible, also helps to turn the scales in favor of debt rather than equity financing.

This causal analysis suggests the nature of the remedies proposed by Mr. McCabe: First of all he urges a thoroughgoing review of the tax system. Some additional investment in equities, he says, would result from a reduction of income taxes, especially in the higher brackets. Removal of the tax exemption privileges accorded State and local government issues might channel some individual savings into stocks or small business enterprises. Finally, Mr. McCabe suggests methods of solving the problem resulting from the inequitable double taxation of corporate dividends as well as revision of the tax laws to permit more rapid depreciation of plant and equipment, and changes in the treatment of capital gains and losses.

These recommendations would result in some loss of revenue. But many tax experts who have urged similar reforms share Mr. McCabe's view that they would remove serious impediments to equity capital investments resulting from the present system of taxation. Moreover, in the long run tax revenues would doubtless be increased through the stimulus to enterprise resulting from the proposed reforms.

Mr. McCabe's second important suggestion for increasing the supply of equity capital is liberalization of the restrictions which prohibit fiduciary institutions, particularly life insurance companies, from investing in corporate stocks. In our opinion this recommendation is open to serious objection, since life insurance companies act as trustees for widows and orphans, and safety of investment should be the first consideration. If life insurance companies were to invest in equities on a small scale, as Mr. McCabe suggests, little would be accomplished, and there would always be a danger that a small beginning would be an entering wedge for large-scale risk taking, that would be highly dangerous.

A great deal can be done, on the other hand, through educational and merchandising campaigns to acquaint potential investors with the advantages of stock ownership. The risks of such types of investment can also be minimized by diversifying investments through the medium of investment trusts, as Mr. McCabe says, or by creating new types of financing agencies such as development corporations and capital banks.

The McCabe program offers nothing new or startling. It is, in fact, a composite of many suggested reforms touching one or more aspects of a complicated problem. Its value lies primarily in its searching analysis of the reasons for the present public attitude toward risk taking and its recognition of the fact that concerted efforts (public as well as private) are essential to remedy the situation.

Atomic Windup

From the manner in which the congressional investigation of the Atomic Energy Commission began, with a rash charge by Senator Hickenlooper, it was inevitable that the probe would peter out. Mr. Hickenlooper made his accusation of "incredible mismanagement" personally against the commission chairman, David E. Lilienthal. It was apparent from the first that, if indeed there had been mismanagement, it was something the whole five-man commission, rather than Mr. Lilienthal alone, should answer for. This partisan attitude, plus a certain ineptness of presentation by Senator Hickenlooper, set the inquiry off on a tangent from which it never fully recovered. Now, after 44 days of hearings, Senator McMahon has wisely decided to terminate the investigation.

Any full evaluation of the hearings must await the report of the Joint Committee on Atomic Energy. It is fair to state, however, that the testimony did not disclose "incredible mismanagement," or anything approaching it, on the part of Mr. Lilienthal or anyone else. Beyond this it is possible to evaluate certain preliminary effects of the examination.

On the credit side the hearings may be responsible for a healthy skepticism, reflected in the Appropriations Committee, that the AEC has been overly generous with public funds. Fuller justification for spending large amounts of money is in the public interest. Moreover, the hearings showed that the commission acted arbitrarily, under an unnecessary cloak of security, in ordering a gas pipeline to Oak Ridge. Likewise, the hearings indicated a possible overuse of emergency clearance procedure as well as laxness in some security precautions. In a negative sense, the inquiry showed where the joint congressional committee had not been on its toes. And the hearings certainly got publicity for Senator Hickenlooper, not all of it good.

But against these lean results must be contrasted the harm already countable. First, the investigation dignified irresponsible charges against a loyal and capable public servant, and it consumed a great amount of time. An unconfined zeal for headlines resulted in a huge furor over an infinitesimal amount of missing uranium. A similar loss of perspective caused scientific fellowships sponsored by the commission to be tied to an unpalatable loyalty oath, although the fellowships have no connection with security. A narrow view of atomic relationships with other countries gave impetus to a sort of neo-isolationism respecting atomic energy. Appropriations were cut more or less blindly. Perhaps worst of all the investigation cast a blight on efforts to limit areas of secrecy and increase the amount of atomic information available.

The real danger is that the commission may be left so intimidated by the raking it has received that it will be afraid to act boldly when necessary. What is most needed now is to substitute a friendly scrutiny for harassment so that the AEC can get on with its job.

Gift Houses

It is beginning to seem clear, on the basis of a number of recent incidents, that no greater misfortune can befall a fellow than to find himself the winner of a raffle, radio giveaway or lottery. The latest case in point is that of a hapless former GI, Alfred Birnbaum, now a student of optometry at Columbia University, whose wife in a moment of carefree abandon took a 50-cent chance on a $15,000 furnished house in a ticket sale campaign sponsored by the American Women's Voluntary Services. Mrs. Birnbaum won the house.

A $15,000 house, one might suppose, is not such a bad thing to win. Mr. Birnbaum's plight would seem preferable, at first blush, to that of Mr. John J. Noone who, as this newspaper reported some days ago, found himself in sudden possession of $1000 worth of women's hats, a roundtrip ticket to the North Pole (nontransferable), a 5-year supply of men's knitwear and sundry other rather bulky nonconvertible merchandise—all because he committed the seemingly innocent blunder of identifying a "secret saying" as "All that meat and no potatoes."

But Mr. Birnbaum's house was located on a parking lot at the corner of 52d st. and Avenue of the Americas, New York, and the charge for parking it there is a modest $50 a day. Moreover, the owner of the parking lot wants to go back to parking cars on it and insists that the house be dismantled forthwith. Mr. Birnbaum had no other place to park his house; and, anyway, no one seemed interested in moving it for him for less than $3000. This resulted in a swift loss of appetite on the part of prospective purchasers. Mr. Birnbaum was reported to be seeking a sucker who would take the whole problem off his hands for the original 50-cent price of the raffle ticket, but is said finally to have found a Samaritan who paid him a full $1000.

Of course, everyone who participated in this splendid charitable enterprise did so out of the loftiest of motives. The A.W.V.S. just wanted to raise a little money. The manufacturers of the semiprefabricated house just wanted to display a model of their product. The parking lot owner just wanted to help along a worthy cause; he could make twice as much money parking cars. And Mrs. Birnbaum, like any red-blooded American, just wanted to hit a jackpot. Well she did, and now everybody concerned with it is as sorry as can be. Apparently it's still very difficult to get something for nothing; and maybe it would be a good idea to prescribe rules for the attempt by law. At the very least there ought to be some legal limits on the giving of white elephants.

AdministrativeEconomy

President Truman's emergence in the role of instigator and defender of the plan for a cutback in military expenditures enables him to take the offensive against certain members of Congress who urge economy in the abstract, but raise anguished cries when economy takes the concrete form of dismissing superfluous Government employes who are residents of the districts or States that those legislators represent. It is a solid rule in Congress, the President said, that economy should be in the other fellow's district, and that attitude accounts in large part for the failure of the legislative branch to translate demands for retrenchment into an effective assault on spending programs.

Senator Byrd, however, an outstanding champion of economy in Government, is a legislator who has the courage of his convictions. He unqualifiedly indorses the present economy proposal as the "first honest-to-goodness effort" that has been made toward reduction in Government personnel in a decade. There was, of course, a sharp drop in Federal civilian as well as military employment after the war. But, as Solomon Fabricant pointed out in his study of the Rising Trend of Government Employment, the postwar level remained considerably above the projected prewar trend. Furthermore, the downward trend has been reversed and Senator Byrd estimates that Federal employment has been increasing lately at the rate of nearly 300 persons per day.

Government costs can be cut in two ways: (1) by eliminating, paring, or rejecting new spending programs, and (2) by reducing the administrative costs of existing programs by cutting out waste, and increasing efficiency. The announced cutbacks in the military establishment belong in the second category. They have been made by the executive branch of the Government and do not require legislative action, since they involve no changes in functional activity. That is the way it should be; for Congress is handicapped in its efforts to reduce the expenditures of existing establishments by what Senator Byrd has aptly described as "the archaic procedures and confusing language" which characterize its action on fiscal legislation, as well as by its fear of the political consequences of budget paring. Moreover, since the executive branch of the Government is responsible for maintaining efficient administration, it should take the initiative in cutting out unnecessary expenditures.

With the courageous backing of the President, the courageous Secretary Johnson is in a position to resist political pressures, and exercise the authority given him under the Unification Act to establish firm controls over the spending of the military establishment. His efforts to promote economy and efficiency in his department will undoubtedly enhance his reputation in the eyes of the public, and rightly so. And we hope that with the aid of prospective reorganizational reforms centralizing administrative responsibility, other department heads will be encouraged to weed out superfluous employes instead of following the accepted practice of spending all the money Congress can be induced to appropriate for their use.

THE SABBATH EARLY

It was the Sabbath early
And Jesus walked through the corn.
The morn like a bud lay folded,
The blackbird slept on the thorn,
Night still dampened the stubble,
A wraith moon hung in the sky,
But the wind first sensed a presence
And whispered the stalks, "He is nigh."
The bird shot up from her nesting,
The sun burst forth full born,
The earth sang under His footsteps,
And Jesus walked through the corn.

Out-Of-Town Tags

A few days ago you printed a story headed "Missouri Man Fights D. C. Car Tag Order." The matter involved an automobile driver who apparently had been warned by a police officer for driving out-of-town tags and exceeding the reciprocity granted by the District of Columbia traffic regulations. He was notified to purchase District tags.

It appears there was some "buck passing" at the District Building on receipt of a letter from Senator Pat McCarran interceding for the driver.

Traffic Director Keneipp should have no difficulty in solving this matter. He made a regulation on June 17, 1947, stating:

"Any motorist who spends an annual aggregate of ninety (90) days in the District of Columbia must obtain District tags for his automobile."

As far back as August, 1946, I brought to the attention of Mr. Keneipp the matter of thousands of automobiles operated in the District of Columbia on out-of-town license plates. A brief campaign was put on by the Police Department. In 12 hours 1300 cars were rounded up and tagged.

On October 7, 1947, I wrote Commissioner John Russell Young about the same matter. He replied, stating my recommendation would be given careful thought. Nothing happened. However, thousands of cars are being operated in the District of Columbia on out-of-town tags, exclusive of Maryland and Virginia, escaping personal tax and car inspection. In my neighborhood I believe every State in the Union is represented along with some territories from the South Pacific. Some of the cars have had these tags for more than a year.

Debt To Britain

Does anyone recall a verse that ends, "Lest we forget, Lest we forget?"

Read what Senator Langer and Congressman Burdick have to says in the Congressional Record and understanding will come.

The former mortally hates Churchill; the latter sheds bitter tears over the 26 billion dollars he claims we've loaned to Britain.

Britain saved herself and helped save us for 26 billion dollars in two years. We're spending 15 billion for one year's armaments now.

How many British lives were lost in those two wars? How many buildings, public and private? Whose shipping was sent to the bottom of the ocean?

"England's Empire with inexhaustible resources is breaking up," says Mr. Burdick. But if and when it does break up, we'll really bear the burden.

We'd better save Britain, if we can on 26 billion.

Divorce Stories

A newspaper is a family affair from the time it enters the house until it is collected for waste paper. It goes a long way toward molding the opinions of the father, the mother, and the children. A family can partly be judged by the newspapers that are allowed to enter the home. With this in mind I want to express my sense of shock at a paper like The Washington Post descending to the cheap journalism found in your series on divorce. However sociologically they may have started out, the sections on the "Seeing Eye" were a bit of sensational journalism unfit for general family consumption.

Your highlighting of the problem of the unwed mother is also questionable front page stuff in spite of its more serious tone. Unwed motherhood is frequently only one of the many results of a feeling of emotional insecurity. If the problem were treated more as a whole (on the editorial page), it would be of much greater assistance to parents, but, of course, it would lack sensationalism.

Arlington Hospital

Unfortunately the only way to know the value of any hospital is to make use of it. As a recent patient in the Arlington Hospital I wish to say that I sincerely hope the campaign to raise $25,000 is successful.

My stay there was during our record-breaking heat wave, certainly an uncomfortable time for everyone. However, everything there ran like clockwork. We received not only the excellent care people expect in hospitals, but beyond that every member of the staff took a kindly, personal interest in us, sparing no effort to see that we were comfortable and happy.

We of this area are fortunate in having such a hospital and should give it the financial support it deserves.

Finnish Exports

What's behind the Finnish strike wave? It could be the rising cost of living which became inevitable when the Finnish National Bank devalued the krona by 17.7 per cent to boost exports.

The importer will therefore pay the bank 21½ per cent more krona to pay his foreign bills. When the exporter turns in the dollars or sterling received for shipments he is paid 21½ per cent more in krona—that which the importer had paid. This means that the consumers are subsidizing the exporters, and the woodpulp producer can maintain his price and ship 17 tons for the price of 14 with the consumers paying him for the 3 tons. In case of sterling devaluation the British consumers will subsidize the colonial producers, too.

The foreign investor also benefits. He can buy Finnish stocks, bonds or industries at 82¼ per cent of the asked price and the consumers pay the difference.

Not only will imports cost the consumer more, but prices of commodities exported will rise to the level received for exports, including the subsidy.

Actually, devaluation is like a wage cut to Finnish workers; they are trying to retrieve their loss, and it is unrealistic to assume that organized workers wouldn't. Devaluation cuts pensions, too, and impairs social security which conversely takes from the "haves" and redistributes to the "have-nots." It's Marshall aid in reverse.

Blockade As An Alternative Strategy

"Veteran" makes an important point in his August 20 reply to my communication printed on August 18. There are indeed "ifs" in war, and he accurately outlines a series whose results happened to be in our favor. And thereby he obscured, I hope unintentionally, my main thesis.

This was that by the end of January, 1945 (three months after the "ifs" he mentions), the over-all situation was such that Japan could have been forced to surrender without further invasions, without bombing her cities or industries, without using the atom bomb, and without selling out Manchuria at Yalta, solely by means of a complete blockade of all Japanese transport, using weapons then readily available and proven.

"Veteran" does not deny this; he merely says something might have gone wrong. Of course, something can go wrong with any kind of campaign. But it is difficult to believe that Japan, then completely defeated in the air and at sea, and already largely strangled, could have wiggled out of this particular noose under any conceivable set of mischances. If she had, we could still have resumed bombing.

My thesis is arguable, however. I wish "Veteran" had argued it instead of running around end. What disturbs me is not that the course of blockade was not followed, but that it does not seem even to have been considered, and that no one wants even now to consider it hypothetically to see if it contains lessons for the future.

Mr. Stimson and others seem always to assume that we had only two alternatives: to invade at frightful costs, or to destroy and atomize indiscriminately. They never mention blockade as a third possibility, though by June, 1945, the military helplessness of Japan (except for the defenses against home invasion) was certainly clear. Perhaps our military men, their minds set in their private grooves, never told Mr. Stimson such an alternative existed.

And so again today, as we consider our future military needs, I hear only two refrains: "drop atom bombs on cities," and "invade and occupy." The first, it seems to me, throws away psychological and moral assets without which we could not hope to defeat the overwhelming manpower of Eurasia. The second, projected against the vast expanse of Eurasia, is clearly preposterous. Are there no other strategies in modern war?

"Veteran" seems concerned that "we do not acquire a false sense of shame for our conduct in World War II." I have never felt shame for our conduct and I feel none now. My concern regarding our conduct is not an emotional retrospect, but a rational search for lessons applicable to the future.

In opposing an enemy whose strength is a potent blend of military, political and, yes, spiritual power, we cannot afford an unimaginative, stereotyped war of blunt force. Nor can we dissociate our military weapons from our other techniques. You don't believe the radio commercial if the sponsor's product just burned your house down. You don't, in fact, even hear his program.

In the light of these considerations I do contend, deliberately (and not unconsciously, as "Veteran" hopes), that the unrestricted bombing of cities and industry is—as it was in Japan—an unnecessary act. I am less concerned with the brutality of this unnecessary act than with its stupidity, which another time may be fatal to us.

I do not pretend to have all the answers, but I do think this problem needs to be discussed fully, and in an atmosphere which does not assume that all decisions made by great men in the past are beyond our questioning. I suggest again that the congressional investigation of air power could well be elevated to a discussion of this critical issue of our time—and of our survival. STUART B. BARBER.

Price Support Consequences

By Mark Sullivan

Increased Regulation

THROUGHOUT the proposals in Congress dealing with price support of farm crops, and the vast and troubled discussion that goes on, are some main characteristics. One is that price support is to be kept; the proposals contemplate only modification of it. It is about variations of these that contention goes on.

At the same time there is awareness of growing public resentment. The Democratic majority leader, Senator Lucas of Illinois, said the other day that price support has "gone too far," that "people will be so bitter that we'll break the whole Federal farm program down."

There is awareness likewise that public resentment may increase, because the costs of it are likely to increase with the immensity of many current crops. A corn-belt newspaper, the Des Moines Register, describing the immensity of the corn crop, and the burden put upon the Government in supporting it, said that "this is the 'potato mess' all over again—in exaggerated form."

Between corn and potatoes there is a difference, though largely superficial. The Government supports potatoes by direct purchases. Its support of corn is by "nonrecourse loans"—loans, that is, which the farmer need not repay—he can just let the Government take over the corn put up as security for the loan. By this process, and due to the immensity of this year's corn crop, the Government is likely to pay out for corn many times the 225 million dollars it lost last year in supporting potatoes. Other grain crops are supported in the same way as corn. The cost of supporting these crops is likely to run into billions.

ALONG WITH this the prices of these crops to the public in the open market will be kept up by the artificial support price which the Government decrees. So will the prices of foods into which corn enters. As it is put by the Des Moines Register, "The Nation is not getting more pork, beef, milk or eggs (the foods for which corn is the raw material) than it could consume . . . Many children still do not get enough milk. Many people would like to eat more meat . . ."

As the public becomes aware of hardship, so is the farmer beginning to get omens of what is ahead for him if price support goes on. The proposals for modification include regulation, especially limitation of acreage, in order to reduce the size of future crops. This is being put in effect on potatoes. The Department of Agriculture has authority to limit acreage if a two-thirds majority of the growers of a crop agree to it. Potato growers in Maine have agreed, and acreage planted this year was reduced 23½ per cent, from last year's 193,000.

BUT POTENTIAL offsets to reduced acreage are noted by Reporter John W. Ball of The Washington Post who made a careful study of the Maine potato situation. On a given acreage, more potatoes can be grown by increased use of fertilizer, and by a method readily practicable. Potatoes can be planted in rows only 7 inches apart, instead of 12, 14 and 16 as formerly. Here is a sign of what must be ahead for farmers. Any order directing a farmer to plant only a given number of acres, if it is to be effective, go on and direct how far apart rows shall be planted.

Regulation expands automatically, by forces within itself. One regulation makes another necessary, and the second a third. This has been true of the whole system of price support. When begun, some 12 years ago, it was applied to only five crops called "basic." It expanded crop by crop, until today practically everything grown on a farm is supported.

An end which hardly any American farmer thinks possible is illustrated in England. There the government gave farmers benefits, such as fixed prices for their crops, not materially dissimilar from the price support practice in America. Then the government took the position that if farmers accept benefits, they must not object to regulation. The present stage of regulation in England includes authority of the government to assert that a farmer must manage his farm according to a standard described as "efficiently." If the farmer does not meet that standard, his farm is subject to what is called "compulsory purchase." This amounts to dispossession.

In England today, a farmer does not have title to his land as understood in America. In effect he is what legal terminology calls "tenant at will," or a "tenant by sufferance" of the government. What has taken place in England is in effect socialism of land, though spokesmen of the Labor Party and government shrink from that word.

Truman And The South

On numerous occasions, President Truman has boasted that he won the recent election without the "solid South." This is far less than a half truth. Nine of the Southern States got cold feet and deserted their States' Rights Party and gave their electoral vote to him. They were afraid if they did not Dewey would be elected.

In plain language, fear of Dewey elected Truman. It gave him nine Southern States without which he could never been elected. So where does he get off with his propaganda that he won without the South?

Matter of Fact

Dulles in Vital New Pivot Post

By Joseph and Stewart Alsop

IN THE avalanche of bad news from abroad, it is at least comforting to find a little good news here at home. The good news is that something has at last been done to restore the old close collaboration between the State Department aand the foreign policy leaders in Congress. And the good news is also important news, for the breakdown in bipartisan collaboration on foreign policy, which occurred early this year, has contributed to the growing paralysis of American policy abroad.

The key man in the new arrangement is Senator John Foster Dulles, who would have been Thomas E. Dewey's Secretary of State if Dewey had been elected. Dulles is the middle man in an elaborate triple play. The foreign policy ball is thrown by the State Department to Dulles, and by him to Senator Arthur Vandenberg who throws it back along the same route.

Dulles confers regularly with Secretary of State Dean Acheson, Ambassador-at-Large Philip Jessup, Assistant Secretary of State Dean Rush and other policy-making officials. He then confers in turn with Vandenberg and other Republican leaders, and reports back their views to the State Department.

Vandenberg Was Resented

THIS triple play is necessary for childish but compelling reasons. Foreign Relations Chairman Tom Connally bitterly resented Vandenberg's intimate partnership in making foreign policy. The White House also disliked Vandenberg's role, since it detracted from President Truman's luster. The State Department is less independent of the White House than in the past, and it rather naturally fears Connally's wrath, since Connally's cooperation is essential. Thus the bipartisan system has until recently been allowed to fall into disuse.

The new system of using Dulles as a channel came into being after a recent meeting of Acheson, Vandenberg and Dulles to discuss the Military Aid Program. It is not a formal arrangement, nor is it in any sense an attempt to undercut Connally. Connally does not resent Dulles' role, since Dulles is a freshman Senator, who is allowed to sit in on the Foreign Relations Committee meetings as a courtesy. But, without undercutting Connally, the new system does permit a prior exchange of views between the State Department and the Republican leaders. This private washing of dirty linen is essential if foreign policy is not to founder in petty party squabbling.

The appalling dangers which arose from the abandonment of the old bipartisan system are illustrated by the history of the Administration's version of the military aid bill. Neither Vandenberg, Dulles nor any other Republican had seen the bill before it was dumped in the Senate's lap, and neither, as a matter of fact, had Connally or any of the Democrats. And the fate of MAP is now in serious doubt. It has been jeopardized by this failure to iron out points of disagreement beforehand, to wash the dirty linen in private.

The bill has now been completely redrafted in committee, and Vandenberg and Dulles have inserted a number of amendments designed to appease the economy-isolationist bloc. This appeasement would probably be unnecessary if there had been prior consultation on the bill to start with. And it now begins to seem that appeasement will not be enough. There is very little likelihood that the bill will be passed before October, and there is every likelihood that it will be passed in so lacerated a form that it might better not be passed at all.

Bulwark or Gesture?

ANOTHER growing danger has also jeopardized the fate of the Military Aid Program. For the intimate partnership between the State and Defense Departments, which used to be the second of the main props of American policy, has been dangerously eroded. The secret testimony in executive session on the bill revealed clearly that the State and Defense Departments had not really agreed on the purposes of MAP. There was at least one major contradiction between the testimony of Acheson and that of Secretary of Defense Louis Johnson, and other apparent disagreements between lesser officials.

The fact is that even within the two departments no final decision has ever been reached on American strategy in Europe. There is no real agreement on whether American policy is designed actually to place western Europe in a position of defense, or whether the Atlantic Pact and MAP are mere psychological gestures, like throwing a fish to a seal. And this indecision plays right into the hands of the congressional isolationists and economizers.

It is good news that something is at last being done to restore the wholly essential bipartisan collaboration on foreign policy. But the curious triple play device described above may yet prove a slender reed to lean on. For the signs are that the presidential cronies are moving in more and more on the foreign policy field. And without brilliant executive leadership, the paralysis which is beginning to grip American policy in the face of mounting troubles is sure to become complete.

Palsy Tremors Eased

By Alton L. Blakeslee
Associated Press Science Reporter

NEW YORK. — Another drug that benefits some people with shaking palsy is reported in the New York State Journal of Medicine. The drug, thephorin, brought improvements in 13 out of 24 patients, says Dr. Frank M. Berger, University of Rochester Medical School.

One man, confined to a wheel chair for two years, was able to return to work as a hotel porter. The shaking hands of other patients were brought under control so they could dress and feed themselves. Some were able to walk better than before.

Shaking palsy, or Parkinson's disease, usually strikes after the age of 50 or 60. Tremors are often one of the first effects. Muscles may become rigid, and walking or talking difficult.

The cause is not known. The disease is believed to be due to damage to the brain from hardening of the arteries, or the result of an earlier attack of encephalitis, a brain inflammation.

Thephorin is not a cure, but may help some patients. It appears to be effective in all types of the disease, Dr. Berger said. The drug was originally developed to combat allergies.

Within the last year, medical researchers have reported four other drugs that also benefited some victims of the disease. One is a combination of benadryl, an anti-allergy drug, and either hyosine or rabellon, both derived from belladonna. Twenty-five of 31 persons were helped by this combination in tests at the University of Pennsylvania.

Two Columbia University researchers found that a synthetic drug, artane, brought improvement in 76 per cent of 117 persons suffering from varying degrees of the disease. At the University of Minnesota, 10 of 16 patients were helped by a belladonna drug used along with another chemical, dihydro beta-beta-erythroidine.

Myanesin, a synthetic drug derived from glycerin, also was found at Rochester to have striking effect sometimes in controling the trembling, and in relaxing rigid or twisted muscles.

AFTER the age of 50, you should eat more meat. This is a recommendation from research on the diet of older persons being made by the Ellen H. Richards Institute at Pennsylvania State College.

Persons eating lean meat on the average of 1½ times a day were in better shape than those who ate little meat, said Dr. Pauline Berry Mack, directing the studies. The meat eaters had better conditions of blood, tongue, skin and certain body functions, particularly reflexes and resistance to fatigue, she said.

Those eating liver regularly surpassed all others in their overall medical rating.

Animal tests with neomycin, a new antibiotic, hold promise that it will become another useful drug against tuberculosis.

Neomycin was developed by Dr. Selman A. Waksman, discoverer of streptomycin, the most effective drug yet found for combating TB.

Neomycin prolongs the life of tuberculosis-infected mice for significant lengths of time, said Dr. Geoffrey W. Rake, director of the Squibb Institute for Medical Research, but twice as much is needed as streptomycin. It had toxic effects when 15 times the effective dose was given. Like other antibiotics, neomycin exists in several forms, and a search is being made to see if one of them is more useful than the others.

Brakes that prevent skidding, even on ice, are a new Boeing Aircraft Co. product. These brakes ease off whenever the wheel slows to the point where it would cause skidding. The control for this is a little flywheel, set on the hub and housed with the rest of the braking system. The flywheel is free to turn faster than the big wheel, and does just that.

When the flywheel is going too much faster than the big wheel, that is a sign that a skid is about to start. The difference in speed then starts an electronic device which eases the brake pressure and lets the big wheel roll a little faster.

The company claims this permits the brakes to exert their full stopping power up to the skid point, something which ordinarily doesn't happen. Tires are said to last longer.

French and Belgian scientists have discovered a method to make what they call a bone ghost. This a perfect model of a real piece of bone, which doesn't contain any bone. The new and important thing is that the reproduction is perfect for bone parts so small that they cannot be seen by microscopes. It is done by embedding a thin slice of bone in lucite or some other hard plastic. Then the bone is dissolved away by acid. The dissolved bone is replaced by plastic, which has the exact pattern of the lost bone. The advantage is clearer seeing in microscopes using polarized light. The ghost reveals more than the bone. This work is reported in the magazine Science by Ch. A. Baud and M. J. Dallemagne, respectively of Lyon, France, and Liege, Belgium.

Cows feeding on hay raised on poor soils are just as healthy as those feeding on crops from highly fertilized soils, four Michigan State College researchers report.

Their findings cast doubt on the theory that crops grown on highly fertilized soils are richer in nutritional value. The fertilized fields produced twice as much food for the cattle, but the researchers couldn't detect any difference in chemical analysis of the crops from either plot.

Cows receiving unfertilized hay had higher milk and fat production at first, but this difference diminished later in the four-year tests. No difference was found in the general well-being of the cows in the two groups, said C. W. Duncan, K. M. Dunn, S. T. Dexter and C. E. Millar. Later they will study the nutritional value of the milk from animals fed the fertilized and unfertilized crops.

Bevin Bringing India Bombshell

While Drew Pearson is on vacation, his column is being written by his old friend, Robert S. Allen.

By Robert S. Allen

FOREIGN MINISTER ERNEST BEVIN has a "bombshell" up his sleeve that he will detonate at the forthcoming monetary conference. This is an announcement that Britain will have to pull out of India economically as she did in Greece in 1947.

That withdrawal led to the so-called Truman Doctrine, which has cost the United States more than 700 million dollars to date in aid and military supplies.

Presumed purpose of Bevin's move is to impel the United States to undertake a new "Truman Doctrine" in southeast Asia. Britain would unload on the United States the burden of meeting the dollar and military needs of India, Malaya and other anti-Communist bastions in the Orient.

According to British sources, Bevin will contend that withdrawal from India has become imperative because of inability to meet that country's dollar demands.

Britain owes India a stupendous war debt. In addition to paying off this debt, Britain has also been supplying Indian dollar needs to purchase goods in the United States. Bevin will say that India is requiring more sterling and dollars than originally agreed on and that Britain can no longer meet these demands.

In other words, this is now the United States' baby.

Exact state of Britain's depleted dollar reserves will be revealed shortly after the monetary conference convenes. The report will show that the heavy drain on Britain's dollar reserves has been due largely to India.

Vaughn More

"I can honestly say that I have not got a deep freezer," was the smiling reply. "But I have got a Vaughn."

William Vaughn is a secretary in Barkley's office.

A Pat and a Kick

IT HASN'T been announced, but the Senate Armed Services Committee took a most unusual step. By unanimous vote, it adopted a resolution lauding one Senator and by inference kicking another in the teeth.

The acclaimed Senator is Raymond A. Baldwin (R., Conn.), chairman of the subcommittee investigating the trial of the Nazi perpetrators of the Malmedy massacre. The inferentially condemned Senator is Joe McCarthy (R., Wis.), who has turbulently claimed that the SS killers were unfairly tried and that Baldwin's probe has been biased.

McCarthy's name is not mentioned in the resolution, but its import and tenor are clearly aimed at him. His violent blasts at Baldwin have aroused much critical feeling in the Senate, particularly among the Republican colleagues of the two men.

The committee's extraordinary resolution is as follows:

"We take this unusual step because of the most unusual, unfair and utterly undeserved comments that have been made concerning our colleague, Senator Raymond A. Baldwin, and his work as chairman of this subcommittee of the Committee on Armed Services of the United States Senate."

Other members of Baldwin's subcommittee are Senators Lester Hunt (D., Wyo.) and Estes Kefauver (D., Tenn.). The group flies to Germany this week to interrogate the Nazi convicts and other witnesses.

All Set for Foley

DESPITE the covert opposition of Housing Administrator Ray Foley, the bill for a giant low-cost housing program for middle income groups will be voted on by the Senate.

Senator John Sparkman (D., Ala.), author of the measure, has such assurances. He has the powerful backing of Senator Burnet Maybank (D. S. C.), chairman of the Banking Committee, and other leaders. They put the bill through the Banking Committee despite Foley's opposition.

When the measure comes up in the Senate, Foley is due for some caustic berating. Certain liberal Senators have been gunning for him for a long time, and they will use the debate to "work him over."

Major controversial feature of the Sparkman measure is the provision for long-term, low-interest loans for cooperative housing projects. This has been vehemently assailed by the National Association of Home Builders. Backers of the bill have what they consider a squelching rejoinder.

The provision was taken in toto from a bill sponsored last winter by three leading Republicans —Senators Irving Ives (N. Y.), Ralph Flanders (Vt.) and Charles Tobey (N. H.).

I suggest that Secretary of Defense Johnson borrow one of those 5 per cent refrigeration units to put this silly business in deep freeze, including the boondoggling commanding officer."

A 'Constant Reader' Goes Astray

By Hodding Carter

GREENVILLE, Miss.—One day this month a small daily newspaper printed an inexcusably sordid story of the testimony in the investigation of vice and police corruption in Los Angeles. It is difficult to understand how a news service could have permitted it to be sent across the country as written. It is just as difficult to understand how it got into the little newspaper. The news service and the newspaper were certainly at fault.

The editor of the newspaper, who has been and still is away on an extended vacation, received an angry letter a few days afterward from a prominent fellow townsman, justifiably protesting the publication of the story.

But in the course of his remonstrances, this citizen betrayed attitudes that are unfortunately all too common. He recalled that the newspaper had been severely criticizing the sheriff of its own county for wide-open conditions which the sheriff had refused to clean up, and commented, "I do not think what he is doing is any worse than what you are doing,"—namely the publication of the indecent story from Los Angeles.

His concluding paragraph was even more astounding. In it, he said that he believed the publication incident was something that the civic clubs of the town should take up; moreover, other members of one of the clubs had observed that "pictures and other matters have been published that were unnecessary and should not be published."

The writer was well-meaning. However, in his first observation that the editor was as bad as the sheriff, he failed to make a moral distinction between commiting a wrong and in reporting one, however vulgarly. To my knowledge, he has never written a letter to the editor protesting the conditions in his own county—conditions which in a limited degree are as rotten as in Los Angeles. He does not protest the ugly actuality of vice, only the crude description of it in print.

Nor, to my knowledge, has he ever suggested that the civic clubs investigate county corruption. Yet he believes that the civic clubs should take action because the newspaper published one offensively written account of an actual situation. And, finally, there is the hint of community censorship in the remark that certain unnamed citizens believed that certain undescribed stories and pictures should not be published in the hometown paper.

This man is not unusual. It would be better for the country if he were; for there are too many upright people whose sense of moral values is identical with his; who are less disturbed by the reality of civic corruption than by a coarse description of its existence.

There are too many people, honestly disturbed over centralization of governmental power, yet unwilling to demand that local governments be responsible. There are too many people who protest encroachment on their own freedom and who rightly fear totalitarianism, but who would not oppose community pressure censorship of a newspaper.

He was so right about the particular story. He was so wrong about everything else. And I know I have the facts right, because it was my newspaper.

PWs From Russia a Jap Problem

By William Jorden
Associated Press Staff Writer

TOKYO.—Since late in June, nearly 20,000 Japanese have been repatriated after four years' imprisonment in the Soviet Union. New thousands are now pouring into the repatriation port of Maizuru in the year's third "wave" of returns.

Most Japanese are wondering what tactics the Communist-indoctrinated leaders of the latest groups will adopt.

The first wave late in June came into port lustily singing Communist songs. On the train trip to their homes, they stopped at important stations to participate in rowdy Communist-directed welcoming celebrations. Many ignored their waiting relatives to march first to Communist Party headquarters.

The second group, arriving late in July, obviously had been directed to use different methods. One shipload refused for six days to fill out the routine repatriation forms. They only did so when informed they must remain aboard ship until they did. All surrounded themselves with a "silent curtain," refusing to talk.

Ordinary Japanese are puzzled. They say they they cannot understand why these men act in such "un-Japanese" fashion. However, the Japanese are inclined to judge all the repatriates by the actions of a noisy minority.

Thinking It Over

AT FIRST the Japanese press concentrated on reports of Red flag waving, clashes with police and Communist songfests. It said little or nothing of those who quietly went home. Yet the first repatriation shipload gave evidence that the seemingly unanimous Red front was not as solid as the Communist leaders tried to make it appear.

Numbers of those interviewed said they wanted to "think things over" before joining the Communist Party. Others said flatly they had no intention of joining.

This first impression has been supported recently by an increasing number of interviews with repatriates by hometown papers throughout Japan. While many were quoted as saying they were signing up with the Communists, the majority said they were not.

Typical quotations:

"Communism is impossible for me because of my family bonds."

"After returning, I learned that the company I worked for had continued to pay my wages ever since the surrender. This is contrary to the information given us in the Soviet Union. My wife has pleaded with me not to join the Communist Party and I no longer intend to."

"The only way I could feel sure of being returned home was to say I supported Communism."

THEY have outlined the prison system of "political education." Daily lessons were given in Communist doctrine, international analysis, history of Communism in Japan and criticism of conditions in Japan.

Some said that if they refused to take part in this education they were sent to corrective camps and branded as reactionaries. Former prisoners say each camp was directed by a commissar responsible to the Soviet Politburo. He was aided by a "democratic committee" of 10 to 20 prisoners, graduates of a special Communist school and usually young men without families back in Japan.

These graduates, called "aktivs" (actives), command the repatriates on the journey home.

Despite the non-Communism of many repatriates, the hold the "aktivs" have over them is not to be dismissed lightly. Japanese, particularly former soldiers and former prisoners, have deeply ingrained habits of obedience and conformity.

Family ties and traditional loyalties serve to break the Communist hold on others after they have been home a short while.

The Gallup Poll

Deficit Spending Opposed, 44-38

By George Gallup
Director, American Institute of Public Opinion

THE theory of spending to avoid or to cure a depression is not universally or even widely accepted by the American people, judging from a survey just completed by the American Institute of Public Opinion.

President Truman, in his speech before the Shrine Convention in Chicago, reaffirmed his belief in the theory, advanced during the Roosevelt New Deal, that large-scale Government spending was necessary, even if deficits resulted, in order to keep the country developing and business expanding.

This idea of deficit spending was submitted to a cross-section of the Nation's voters.

Here is what the survey found:

"President Truman says that the Government in Washington should borrow money and not attempt to balance the budget at present because it is more important to increase spending of Government money for public works and the like, if a real depression is to be avoided. Do you agree or disagree?"

Agree	38%
Disagree	44
No opinion	18

President Hoover, in his birthday speech at Palo Alto, Calif., August 10, bitterly criticized the spending theory, declaring that "through Government spending and taxes our Nation is blissfully driving down the back road" to collectivism and is "on the last mile."

A sharp party split on the issue is found in today's survey. Republican voters interviewed disagree overwhelmingly with Mr. Truman's spending theory, while a majority of Democratic voters, although a small one, agrees with his position.

Voters who classify themselves as independents politically, lean toward the Republican side on this issue.

Here is the vote by parties:

	Dems.	Reps.	Inds.
Agree	52%	21%	35%
Disagree	29	66	47
No opinion	19	13	18

A fact of significance for the future is that the spending idea appears to have taken greatest hold on the minds of the young generation of voters—those who grew up during the years of the depression and the New Deal.

Voters under 30 in today's survey lean much more heavily toward the spending theory than middle-aged or older voters do. Here is the comparison:

	21-29	30-49	50 and over
Agree	46%	39%	34%
Disagree	36	43	50
No opinion	18	18	16

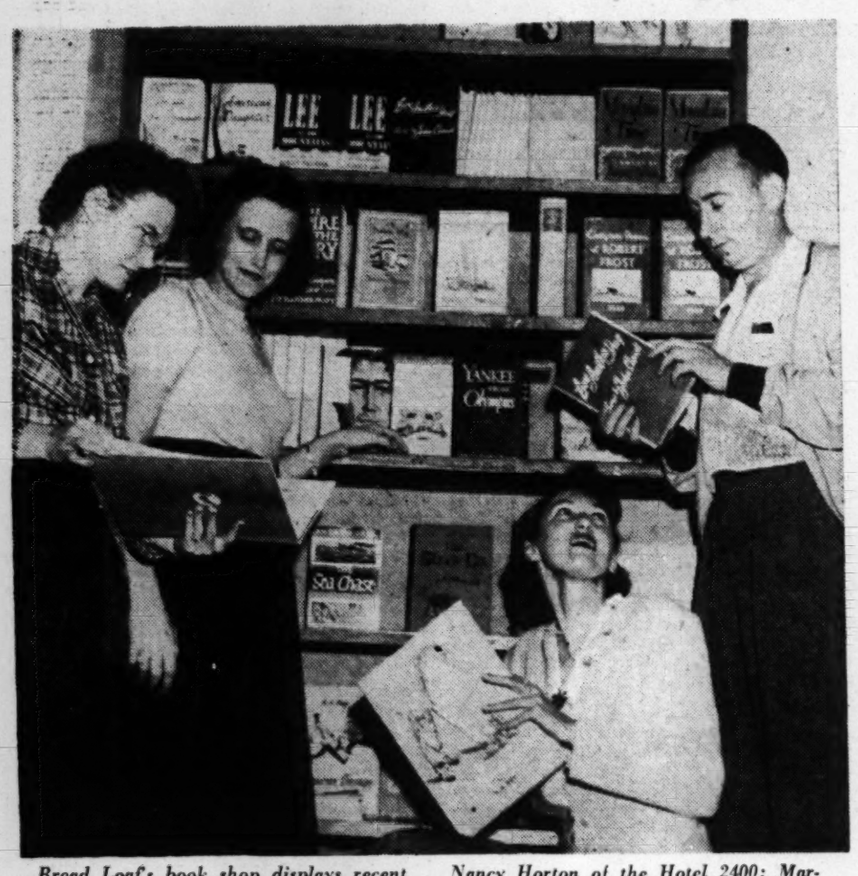
Bread Loaf Is Very Practical

Mad Poetesses Need Not Apply



Bread Loaf's book shop displays recent books by its staff members and fellows. Looking over the stock are (left to right), Mrs. Arnold Lott of Falls Church, Va.; Nancy Horton of the Hotel 2400; Margaret Davis of 1657 31st st. nw.; and Lieutenant Lott, who is a fellow at this year's conference

By Lee Grove
Post Reporter

BREAD LOAF, Vt.—In the heavily wooded Green Mountains, the Bread Loaf Writers' Conference is meeting again.

Robert Frost, Bernard De Voto, Fletcher Pratt and others whose names are prominent in American letters are lecturing to an audience drawn from all parts of the country, including Washington, during the twenty-fourth annual, August 17-31 session.

Oldest of the 18 or more writers' conferences being held across the United States this summer, Bread Loaf is the most famous and probably the most successful.

Just why Bread Loaf, a summer postoffice about 12 miles from Middlebury, should be both a cradle of writers and a graduate school, is a little vague to everyone connected with the conference, to which authors, publishers and literary agents come as lecturers or visitors. It is even more vague than their knowledge of the exact number of acres and buildings on this summer campus of sponsoring Middlebury College.

Looking across to the lake-studded mountains, they will estimate that there are about 15 buildings on about 30 acres of campus — and, oh yes, the celebrated Morgan breed of horse was developed here.

Their minds are just not on such questions. Their minds are on writing, and their approach to it is one of down-to-earth practicality.

Short Story Advice

HELEN EVERITT, magazine writer and editor of the New York office of the Boston publishing house, Houghton, Mifflin, begins a lecture by saying, "As I read your stories I tend to think they are not about enough, and when I analyze that I think it is because they are about too much. The short story is not a novel in miniature . . ."

William Sloane, author and president of William Sloane Associates, publishers, begins, "The first page of any novel is an extremely difficult problem. The reason is that the writer is making so many commitments to his own material . . ."

Bearded Fletcher Pratt, discussing writing for magazines, said, "There isn't any trend. Personalities and life in America account for over 25 per cent of the articles, and have ever since the end of the war. The most outstanding movement is toward peace of mind articles, and next is the complete blackout of interest in the movies, with radio and television taking their place . . ."

Bernard De Voto, fourth incumbent of the oldest column in American journalism—97 years in Harper's Magazine— and a tough-minded controversialist, takes his place at the lecture stand. His glasses pushed up on his forehead, he says, "The things you know you don't check up on, and those are the things you get wrong. And if in a controversy the opposition can get anything on you at all, you have come close to losing the controversy. In muckraking it is a good thing not to use all you know, but to write in such a way that your opponents know you have more material . . ."

Poet Theodore Morrison, a quiet Harvard don and director of the Bread Loaf Conference since 1932, begins, "I want to develop in you a consciousness of all phases of nonfiction writing . . ."

So it goes, five lectures daily, for days. And writers' talk, reading of manuscripts, the rest of the time.

A D. C. Cross-Section

ONE hundred and 12 persons are attending "Bread Loaf" this season. No one has any idea what the additional "floating population" will number—people like Alfred Knopf, the publisher; Brig. Gen. Merritt A. Edson, the Marine Corps hero who became chief of the Vermont State Police and is interested in writing; Rear Admiral Daniel V. Gallery of Vienna, Va., who is interested in novel-writing technique, and the gracious author of "Fire Under the Andes," Elizabeth Shepley Sergeant, who came to lunch as Robert Frost's guest. Some stay for a few hours, some for a day or two.

Discussing a manuscript after a swim in a lake near Bread Loaf are Margaret Davis, again, and Comdr. William J. Lederer, chief of the National Military Establishment's book and magazine section

A typical cross-section of the conference is the group from Washington:

Margaret Davis of 1657 31st st. nw., works in the George Washington University public relations office and is interested in short-story technique.

Mrs. Dorothy Hammar of 1725 Lanier pl. nw., magazine and newspaper feature writer, wishes to broaden her technical knowledge.

Faith Brewer of Fairlington, who works in the State Department's Overseas Information Service, wishes to learn more about novel-writing technique.

Lewis Lofton Moneyway of the University Club, who teaches creative writing, has come to Bread Loaf for years for the stimulation it affords him.

Nancy Horton of the Hotel 2400 is interested in all kinds of writing, including translation.

The Navy and the Marine Corps are represented, too, with Comdr. William J. Lederer, chief of the National Military Establishment's book and magazine section, magazine writer and author of a forthcoming book; Lieut. (j. g.) Arnold S. Lott and Mrs. Lott of 529 Knollwood dr., Falls Church, Va., and Maj. Andrew C. Geer, who is attached to Marine Corps headquarters.

Major Geer, author of "The Sea Chase," is planning to go on inactive duty in October and return to San Francisco to devote his full time to writing. He is currently finishing up a serial for the Saturday Evening Post and will have another novel out in February.

Bread Loaf has accommodations for 125 paying guests. It is felt that it cannot keep its standards with a larger attendance.

To get its students, it relies primarily on word of mouth. It issues only two press releases annually. Some of its students come on the recommendation of publishers, editors and literary agents. Four publishers anonymously provide scholarships each year.

Applicants are "sifted a bit," according to Morrison, who remembers that there were only about 25 students when he became a staff member in 1930.

"One of the problems when I first came here," Morrison adds, "was the precious boy, the genius type—I think we have moved steadily away from that and to a sounder approach to craftsmanship."

Richard L. Brown, associate professor of English at Middlebury College and assistant director of the conference for the past 13 years, said that "once in a while the conference runs afoul of a mad poetess."

What both men were too polite to mention was the employe of a sensational New York newspaper who came to Bread Loaf some years back with the idea that because it pertained to writing it must be a free love colony.

No Academic Taint

BREAD LOAF hierarchy is headed by "the staff"—as if to emphasize its non-academic approach, the word "faculty" is never used.

In addition to those previously mentioned, the staff this year includes Edith Mirrielees, a leading expert on short story writing and editor of the quarterly Pacific Spectator; John Ciardi, a rising young poet with unruly black hair; Frank Campbell, of Station KVSM at San Mateo, Calif., who is consultant in radio writing, and A. B. Guthrie, jr., who at other times teaches a seminar for writers at the University of Kentucky.

"Bud" Guthrie's "The Big Sky" has probably sold 350,000 copies in all editions to date, and gone into several foreign translations.

One of the original lights of the Bread Loaf Conference is Robert Frost, its good gray poet. Now 74, he does no teaching, but comes over from his summer farm home, a mile and a half away, to give an evening lecture and one or two afternoon lectures. He is still writing, and still handles a mean bat in a game of softball.

Manuscripts Criticized

THE fellows stand second in the Bread Loaf hierarchy. They are selected from the nominations of publishers, magazine editors, literary agents, prominent writers and college teachers. They cannot nominate themselves. Their expenses are paid by the conference itself, or by contributions from publishers and other friends of Bread Loaf.

This year's fellows included Lucy Herndon Crockett, author of "Popcorn on the Ginza," and Richard Spong, author of "See If He Wins," a novel to be published shortly.

Third in the hierarchy come the contributors—persons whose manuscripts have been accepted for criticism, and, fourth, the auditors.

Among those whom the staff feels that it has helped are Josephine Jackson, Catherine Drinker Bowen, Eudora Welty, Josephine Niggli (who came as a poet and became a novelist), and Arthur Bernoon Tourtellot.

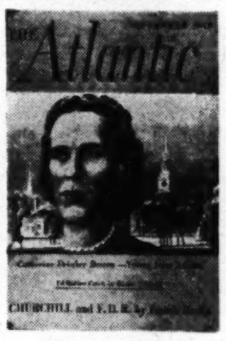
Another is Inez Oelrichs. "She arrived with 15 book-length manuscripts—and we turned her into a good writer of detective stories," said a staff member.

The staff also happily recalls the Hollywood chap who, upon his return to filmland, found there was such a demand for his notes that he could rent them to his fellow screen writers.

The Magazine Rack

By Katharine Graham

THE NEW Atlantic is highly recommended and for diverse reasons. Baseball and fishing interests are well represented by Boston Red Sox's Birdie Tebbetts' "I'd Rather Catch" and John E. Hutton's "The Unpredictable Trout." Catherine Drinker Bowen's new book, "Young John Adams," starts serially. But most important of all is Isaiah Berlin's "Mr. Churchill."



Berlin was attached to the British Embassy during the war, afterward returned to teach philosophy at New College, Oxford. His reports to the Foreign Office on the American political scene became famous in London. Over here, Berlin was known for witty insight and brilliant opinions delivered in such rapid-fire speech that only the initiated could understand more than every other word of what he was saying.

He undertakes to review the second volume of Mr. Churchill's war reminiscences. He ends up, in sentences that frequently stretch to breathless lengths, comparing Churchill and Roosevelt, comparing the two world wars, the points of view, the twentieth century with the nineteenth and the nineteenth with the eighteenth, and imagining what Shelley would have said to Voltaire had they met. It is not only absorbing and entertaining. It contributes materially to the understanding of the times.

ELEANOR ROOSEVELT starts the fourth installment of her memoirs in McCall's with this story:

The King and Queen of England were late reaching Hyde Park after a hectic day in New York. The President, while waiting, had prepared cocktails, which he offered the King on his arrival, adding, "My mother does not approve of cocktails and thinks you should have a cup of tea." The King answered, "Neither does my mother," and took a cocktail.

Mrs. Roosevelt also discusses her Youth Congress activities, the outbreak of war, the third term and her speech to the convention, Harry Hopkins, Missy Lehand, the Cabinet wives, and her column.

When the third term issue arose, Mrs. Roosevelt says, she was careful never to voice her own disinclination, "for a man is entitled to plan his own life, particularly in matters as serious as this." Nor did she ever ask the President what he wanted to do. She thought, however, that he wanted to be in Hyde Park, that the role of elder statesman appealed to him. He had even agreed on a job he would take on leaving the White House, she reveals. "He was to write a longish editorial or article at stated intervals for one of the large New York magazines."

In her usual lady-like way, Mrs. Roosevelt disagrees with Farley's version of what happened at the convention. She was horrified to learn upon her arrival in Chicago, whence she had gone at the request of both Farley and the President, that they had not spoken since the convention opened. She brought them together by telephone, but of this she notes, "I think the description of the convention Jim Farley gave in his articles, as far as my part is concerned, was his impression of what I said rather than what I actually said."

WHAT'S it like in a VA hospital? Jerry Sussillo and Phil Fausstman, patients at Halloran on Staten Island, tell about it in Coronet.

Naturally, the authors say, a chief source of pleasure is news from the outside brought by visitors. Visitors are welcome, they assert, even when they bring only troubles.

"Why is it," they add, "that so few families of patients ever have troubles at home, according to their letters? And why do so few patients ever seem to have setbacks in their recovery—according to theirs? We know we lie. And we know our families lie. So why don't we all face the reality of the situation?"

FRANK SULLIVAN, in the New Yorker, has his cliche expert, Mr. Arbuthnot, testify on baseball.

THERE exists a new pill "that may stop your cold," according to Donald G. Cooley in Better Homes and Gardens. Naturally, they should be taken only with the assent of your doctor. And they "carry no gilt-edge guarantee." But anti-histamine pills, if taken at the first sign of a cold coming on, have been found to be a preventive by Capt. John M. Brewster of the United States Naval Hospital, Great Lakes, Ill.

QUICK takes a brief glance at the Vice President's friend, Mrs. Carleton Hadley, declares her charming, witty, etc. One incompatability: She is a Republican, campaigned for Willkie, once told her milkman (who favored FDR): "No Willkie, no milkie."

FISH are up against it these days. Reader's Digest picks up Don Eddy's explanation of an electronic fish finder from Science News Letter. The Bendix Depth Recorder grew out of the war. It was used for finding enemy mine fields and charting harbors. Fish remained a distracting nuisance in the use of the machine until a Norwegian showed how it could detect schools of fish, reveal not only where they were but what kind. Only then, in 1944, did the Navy consider the food finding values of the device so important it waived security and released the recorder.

Notes on the Margin

THOMAS T. WATERMAN, author of the record-selling "Mansions of Virginia," is on the verge of delivering the manuscript of his history of American architecture to Batsford, the London publisher of handsome art books.

Waterman, consultant on architectural restoration and period design, with offices at 1273 New Hampshire ave. nw., expects the book to be out in 1950. Batsford books are distributed in the United States, by the way.

Waterman is also completing a manuscript on "the smaller Virginia houses" for the University of North Carolina Press, also for 1950 publication.

He is the author of "Domestic Colonial Architecture of Tidewater Virginia" and "Early Architecture of North Carolina," and has worked on the restoration of Williamsburg, Leadbeater's Apothecary Shop and the ballroom of Gadsby's Tavern in Alexandria and Decatur House in Washington, among other projects.

Helmsman Morley

AN announcement has come to hand from the Cunard White Star Line to the effect that Christopher Morley was taking off for Britain with the old teak steering wheel of the barque Otago, first command of Joseph Conrad, who died 25 years ago this month.

The Otago, which figures in some of Conrad's stories, was built in Britain in 1869. The wheel was recovered in 1946 from the vessel, a hulk in a graveyard of ships at Hobart, Tasmania. Its destination is the Honorable Company of Master Mariners' floating museum moored in the Thames off Temple Stairs, London.

Could there be anything more Morleyesque than his taking the wheel back to England?

Marion Vallat Emrich, wife of Dr. Douglas Emrich, chief of the Library of Congress' folklore division, has signed a contract with Holiday House for a book on folklore of animals for 1950 publication. She is the author with George Korson ("Pennsylvania Songs and Legends") of "A Child's Book of Folklore."

Dr. Emrich's "It's an Old Wild West Custom" will be published by Vanguard September 19, but the Emrichs will not be here for the occasion. They are leaving in two or three days for a stay in Virginia City, Nev.

Lawrence Languishes

DOUBLEDAY is not rushing into print "The Mint," the autobiographical fragment of his Royal Air Force days that T. E. Lawrence of Arabia left behind when he died in an accident in 1935.

Lawrence said it could not be published before 1950, and so at the time only 50 copies were printed of the approximately 200-page book, of which only 10 were offered for sale.

Doubleday, Lawrence's American publisher, is holding back publication, however, because Lawrence's literary executor will permit no cuts and there is fear that an Englishman, still living, who figures in the book will consider himself libeled.

"The Mint" is an outspoken account of military experience, but there has been so much bold writing since Lawrence wrote in the 1920s that when it is published it is not likely to shock anyone.

Crocodile's Teeth

PUBLIC AFFAIRS PRESS will publish sometime in September or October "Out of the Crocodile's Mouth," a collection of drawings from the Soviet humor magazine, The Crocodile. The selections are chosen to portray Russian opinion about the United States.

Editor of the book is Dr. William Nelson, who resigned August 12 as chief of the air information section, air studies division, Library of Congress, to join the faculty of the English department at Columbia University's graduate school.—LEE GROVE.

A Dreamer Born Centuries Too Soon

'Egyptian' a Rich Reconstruction

By Sterling North

THE EGYPTIAN. By Mika Waltari. Putnam. 503 pp. $3.75.

NEARLY 3500 years ago a young, sensitive, peace-loving Pharaoh of Egypt, Akhnaton, looked up at the flaming red disk of the sun and came to a world-shaking conclusion.

"There is," he said to himself, "only one God, Aton; and I shall banish all the fierce old gods—especially Ammon—who have misled my people and fattened my corrupt priests. Furthermore, I shall avoid war, free the slaves of Egypt and help make this a better world in which to live."

Alas for all idealists who move too swiftly. Savage tribes began to encroach upon Syria and other outlying provinces of the Egyptian Empire. The powerful Ammonite priests and their worshipers stirred up civil war. The freed slaves ran riot. Egypt began to slip into weakness and poverty.

But Akhnaton, the first powerful monotheist, and a dreamer born centuries before his time, had conceived an idea so magnificent that via Moses and Christ it still profoundly affects the faith and destiny of mankind.

The story of that stirring time is told in this full-blooded and fascinating novel, which is already a sensational best seller in eight European nations, including the author's native Finland.

Waltari chooses for his chief protagonist Sinuhe, physician to Akhnaton, who is sent to tour Babylonia, Syria, Crete and most of the rest of the known world to report upon the aims and armaments of the restless adjoining nations. He comes home and eventually poisons the peace-loving Pharoah whose policies are ruining Egypt. His old age is spent in remorseful exile.

Such in barest outline is the blueprint of Waltari's great historical reconstruction, a book which teems with Egyptian rulers, warriors, slaves, priests, spies, dedicated virgins and girls not so virginal; a chronicle which virtually encompasses the entire culture of the cradle of civilization, circa 1400 B. C.

The jacket of "The Egyptian" is a painting by Robert Stuart MacKellar

A Mosaic Parallel

SINUHE'S personal story alone would make an engrossing historical novel. His adventures begin as a baby cast adrift in a basket on the Nile (see Sigmund Freud's "Moses and Monotheism," Knopf, 1939, for enriching parallels). Sinuhe further exemplifies the oft-told folktale by being of royal birth, though unaware of his heritage throughout a youth spent with poor but gentle foster parents.

Educated by his "father," who is a physician, and by Ammonite priests, he rises to royal favor because of his great skill.

Three women, a rapacious and beautiful harlot of Thebes, a dedicated virgin priestess of Crete and a loving and faithful Thebian waitress, dominate his not-too-happy love life. His travels as a spy for Horemheb, chief of the Pharoah's army, would in themselves serve as a sufficient Odyssey to make a book.

Sinuhe, however, is but one of the well-drawn figures acting out one of several plot themes in this ambitious novel.

Others of the cast include:

Nefertiti: Akhnaton's beautiful, highly intelligent and eventually faithless wife.

Kaptah: wily, thieving, but devoted one-eyed slave of Sinuhe, who rises to riches but never neglects his old master.

Nefernefernefer: glamorous harlot of Thebes who seldom said "Nevernevernever" to any man of wealth.

Horemheb: the Egyptian general and Pharaoh-maker who outwaited four rulers before himself assuming the throne.

Quite aside from the characters and the well-fashioned plot of this story, there is the rich background material apparently introduced effortlessly. Waltari seems to know almost as much as the late Professor Breasted about this period and must have spent years in dusty archives.

A Brutal Society

LIFE for the poor was agony even in Akhnaton's enlightened reign. Noses and ears were cut off for the slightest offenses. In war, hands were amputated as trophies. Soldiers pillaged and raped and tortured, virtually wiping out the inhabitants of any town they captured. The morals of such princesses as Baketmaon, sister of Akhnaton, could slip to a level lower than that of girls like Nefernefernefer. Meanwhile the priestly cult set an all-time record as parasites, politicians and dispensers of superstitious twaddle.

Because he never allows himself to make a modern comment upon Akhnaton's era, Waltari has painted a far less glamorous picture of the saintlike Pharoah than is usual in fiction or even in straight history. In the light of subsequent millennia, Akhnaton was a great religious innovator. But to his own cynical countrymen at the time he was a social revolutionary, religious meddler and fanatic who was endangering the country.

Thus Waltari may be accused of altering slightly the consensus concerning the Pharaoh, but certainly never through the inexcusable method of altering the facts. As for minor differences with other historians: some have claimed that Akhnaton and Nefertiti had seven daughters, while Waltari settles for six. A matter of rather slight moment after 3500 years.

Perhaps in part this novel is a titanic parable. Perhaps Waltari is saying to his fellow Finns and to the rest of the world that a god of peace like Aton is an admirable conception. But with the barbarians nipping off one province after another on the borders of civilization, do we dare as yet become confirmed pacifists? Must we not, first of all, beat back the savage tribes who like the Hittites of Akhnaton's day still spread deadly propaganda and seek to destroy older and gentler civilizations in their mad grab for power?

If I were a Finn living on the border of a police state which twice in a decade had tried to overrun my little country, I think (consciously or not) I would have woven such a parable into my book.

In Washington

people are arguing about

THE HIGH COST OF VENGEANCE

A startling eye-witness report on our government's strange "left-hand-doesn't-know-what-its-right-hand-is-up-to" policy in Germany

by Freda Utley

author of THE DREAM WE LOST, etc., who toured Germany last Fall and asked some blunt questions about what she saw.

THE HIGH COST OF VENGEANCE, judging from the reviews appearing throughout the country, has created nasty tempers, great enthusiasm, a few startled raised eyebrows and a great deal of talk. The NEW YORK TIMES reviewer (Delbert Clark) says "It is astonishing how much misinformation the author has been able to pack into a few pages in support of the hypothesis armed with which she invaded Germany last year." Reinhold Niebuhr in THE NATION counters with "Miss Utley's indictment is vigorous and sweeping. It includes the analysis of almost every absurdity into which we have been betrayed . . . Such an indictment may purge our humanity of the inhumanity to which all nations are prone."

The CINCINNATI ENQUIRER blasts it with "The dead, withered hand of Joe Goebbels will be thrust upward from the grave in a 'Heiling' salute to Freda Utley . . ." Right after reading this we saw Edith Hamilton's high praise for the book: "I am a reasonably well read person, but I had never an idea of what we are doing over there until I read The High Cost of Vengeance. Now I know, and every man and woman in the country should know. I pray for the sake of my country that the book will be widely read. It makes an ineffaceable impression of the writer's invincible integrity and cool clarity of mind in weighing evidence, together with her high passion to end our wrong doing in Germany before it is too late." W. L. White calls it, "Timely and valuable," and Rose Wilder Lane, in the ECONOMIC REVIEW OF BOOKS writes, "It is a brilliantly competent factual report of American action in Germany, a report long overdue to American citizens and suppressed by the men who gave it to us. Do not fail to read it."

And so it goes.

HERE is a book about what is happening in Germany—about how the German people feel about the Paris Conference, the occupation, Communism, the reparations program—about what the men representing our government in Germany are up to. You owe it to yourself to read it; for remember, Germany's problems are only as far away as the possibility of a third world war, and as close to you as your own pocket book—you as a taxpayer are footing the bills for government blundering.

HENRY REGNERY COMPANY, Chicago 4, Illinois

A First Novel With Few Vices

A Stable of Scribblers for Hire

THE BIG WHEEL. By John Brooks. Harper. 239 pp. $2.75.

IT WOULD be unfair to say that John Brooks gives the weekly magazine business the "Huckster" treatment, because he is a better balanced, more mature writer than Frederic Wakeman.

JOHN BROOKS

He doesn't need to satirize. All he needs to do is to tell the unvarnished truth. And the truth in this instance is quietly appalling.

I agree with J. Donald Adams, Gerald Johnson, Amy Loveman, Victor Gollancz and all the other enthusiasts who have seen this novel in manuscript or book form. As Adams says, "not in a blue moon" have we had a better first novel by an American writer.

It has all the virtues and few if any of the vices of a "first" novel. In other words, it has the fervor, the fresh perception and righteous indignation which are the inheritance of youth. But it has little of the naivete, callow self-dramatization and faulty construction which usually mark an initial attempt in this difficult field.

Briefly, the story concerns Ed Masterson and his stable of writers and editors who turn out a big circulation weekly from the thirty-ninth floor of a New York skyscraper.

Ed is the big wheel. His young second cousin, Dick Peters, who gets a job on the magazine, is the narrator. Only these two are fully realized personalities.

An Ill-Assorted Crew

OTHER characters on the staff include Maynard Burnside, a sadistic opportunist who kicks the weaker man under him because he realizes that he himself deserves nothing better; Henry LaPointe, a brilliant word-merchant with no more convictions than a con man; Herb Katzman, a sensitive former football player who reviews art, music and literature along lines prescribed by the big wheel; Bill Gordon, solid, engaging, unoriginal; Struther Carson, famous and drunken former correspondent, who allows his name to be used over articles manhandled by the home office, and Sturtevant Smith, Burnside's whipping boy, who runs the religious department and hates it.

All of these characters except Masterson himself despise the policy of the magazine. Most of them write solely for a pay check, and seek to justify their continuous literary prostitution (or cynically accept their fate), until one day it becomes necessary to take a stand against the big wheel.

But in the crisis it is Masterson who proves to be a bigger individual in every way than any man or group of men on his staff.

Here are some of the reasons why I feel this novel is distinctly unusual, particularly for the work of a very young man.

It sees all human beings as complicated compounds of good and evil.

It concedes that it is easier for a pipe-smoking, isolated university professor like Dick's old friend and mentor, Horton Wilson, to be a Simon-pure idealist than it is for a man in the rough-and-tumble outer world to retain his original vision.

While liberal in general tone, it makes the discovery (seldom noted in current literature) that there are such things as honest conservatives and such things as dishonest liberals (and vice versa).

It creates an entire world, with its jargon, its hierarchy, its morals and manners.

Without preaching, it delves into the important problem of journalistic ethics—honest reporting and editing and the close affinity these have to personal honesty and human decency.

It sees clearly the enormous significance of the relationship between a handful of writers and their millions of readers and the deeper enigma of the writer's relationship to himself.

He Thinks for Himself

IN A very unpretentious way, this book is a modern "Pilgrim's Progress," and Dick Peters (no less than Ed Masterson) is Christian, whose doubts are giants, whose sins are a pack upon his back, but who unlike Christian has no chart to see him safely at last from the City of Destruction and through the Slough of Despond.

The style is brisk, clear and very readable without ever stooping to the easy, eye-catching tricks of the trade.

And, most unusual of all, the writer thinks for himself and does not lean upon the doubtful authority of such mind-paralyzing prophets as Marx and Freud.

It looks to me as though America has found a major novelist in young John Brooks.

Study of Witch Trials Has a Sickening Impact

THE DEVIL IN MASSACHUSETTS: A Modern Inquiry into the Salem Witch Trials. By Marion L. Starkey. Knopf. 300 pp. $3.50.

ANYONE who has read "The Lottery" can still evoke a shudder at the casual skill with which Shirley Jackson built her horror story to its climax. Now Miss Starkey, an instructor at the University of Connecticut, has achieved the same fine artistry with documented facts as her raw material.

This is the incredible story of how an entire colony was driven beyond the bounds of sanity by the mouthings of a small group of girls ranging in age from 9 to their late teens—"what one might now call a pack of bobby-soxers were not the term pictorially incongruous." They took their cue from the voodoo stories of a West Indian woman named Tituba, who ironically was the slave of Salem Village's Puritan preacher, and it was his own daughter, Betty, who touched off the hysteria by falling sick.

The Calvinists lived in literal fear of the devil, and the villagers soon agreed that Betty was possessed by a malevolent spirit. Betty and her friends accommodatingly denounced Tituba and some other women, and the witch-hunt was on. When the girls discovered the power they could command simply by screaming and collapsing in the presence of their victims, their audacity became boundless.

High and Low

"THESE GIRLS were instinct with repressed vitality," Miss Starkey writes, "with all manner of cravings and urges for which village life afforded no outlet." They soon found outlet enough, setting their sights as far distant as what is now Maine, and as high as the Calvinistic hierarchy.

All sorts of persons were denounced as witches, from the revered matriarch of a large family to a village harlot, and from a half-witted slattern to the colonial governor's wife. Anyone who even ventured to suspect the girls of something less than demoniac possession soon found himself on trial—men as well as women—and within a few months more than 150 persons were in prison on witchcraft charges.

The trials were almost barbarous.

"The courtroom became a madhouse. Out of the throats of the girls issued a howling and a roaring that was more and less than human. Their bodies jerked and snapped in the unearthly choreography of their convulsions."

And their evidence was unassailable. They had only to testify that they had been tormented by the familiar of the defendant, and the poor wretch was doomed. Twenty men and women were hanged before sanity began to reassert itself after seven months, partly because of the girls' overreaching themselves in denouncing the high and mighty. Miss Starkey also points out that the panic was "distinguished less by its violence than by the pertinacity with which sanity struggled for domination from the first and by which it finally prevailed."

As for the girls themselves, some later married and lived out normal lives, but some "went unmistakably bad."

Modern Parallel

THE author calls this 257-year-old episode "an allegory of our times."

"Though this particular delusion has vanished from the western world," she writes, "the urge to hunt 'witches' has done nothing of the kind. It has been revived on a colossal scale by replacing the medieval idea of malefic witchcraft by pseudo-scientific concepts like 'race,' 'nationality,' and by substituting for theological dissension a whole complex of warring ideologies." She adds the hope that "enlightenment, too, is a phenomenon that may recur."

Miss Starkey has written a remarkable book. It has the sickening impact of "The Lottery," yet it is as matter of fact as a police incidental. It is a psychological study, yet it is devoid of professional jargon ("hysteria" is the most technical term that comes to mind). She shows great restraint in fixing the blame for the mass hypnosis, even exonerating one or two of the girls. And she thinks Cotton Mather was less of a witch-hunter than his contemporary critics made him out to be.—HAROLD KNEELAND.

A Beebe Imprimatur

WILLIAM BEEBE, author of "High Jungle" and other outstanding volumes on the flora and fauna of this planet, was asked about the most exciting moment in his life. Mr. Beebe did not mention any of his narrow escapes, but told of a deep dive in his bathysphere in which he was so intent upon studying the fish in front of his little window that he did not notice for hours that he was sitting on a monkey wrench. It left its imprimatur on his seat for the next several days.

Tulagi Figured Larger at First

How Guadalcanal 'Happened'

By James E. Hague

GUADALCANAL, The First Offensive. By John Miller, jr. Government Printing Office. $4.

THIS story of Guadalcanal is the second volume of the Army's ambitious plan to record the war in the Pacific, in itself only a sub-project of a mammoth undertaking covering the United States Army in World War II.

The master title is misleading because this record of the fighting on Guadalcanal can no more be, and is not, an exclusive Army history, than a Marine, Navy or Air Force account. As Admiral Halsey has said, the successes in the South Pacific were not "the achievements of separate services or individuals but the result (of) one successful 'fighting team' . . ."

Many of the places in the South Pacific are already only vague memories except to those who fought there. In a little while, only the stamp collector, the traveler, and the historian will recall such places as Kolombangara, Kavieng, Tonga Tabu, Lae and Salamau, Malaita, etc.

The name of Guadalcanal, however, will probably escape that forgetfulness because it was here that the Americans cried "Halt! Enough!" to their enemies.

Tulagi Original Target

THE author of this volume, John Miller, jr., a wartime Marine, captures the significance of this battle, and from his record we learn the amazing proportion of happenstance in the events which made Guadalcanal rather than some other island the scene of America's first offensive.

After Midway had restored much of the naval balance in the Pacific, the strategists turned their attention from our own shores to Australia and New Zealand. Logically, that meant turning attention to our lines of communication and the developing Japanese threat down through the Solomons and New Guinea.

Tulagi, a small island off Guadalcanal, apparently figured more largely than Guadalcanal in both Jap and American thinking until, having seized Tulagi, the Japs decided to build an air base on Guadalcanal. As a matter of fact, the order commanding that the offensive be undertaken mentioned as the first objective "Tulagi and adjacent areas."

The early chapters of Mr. Miller's volume portray the feeling of haste which attended the undertaking. Our military leaders realized we had "too little" for this offensive, but they also recognized that to wait for more would be to make the venture "too late."

The Marines landed on Guadalcanal on August 7 with improper maps, scanty support and scanty equipment. The necessity of air and sea cover for land troops was probably never more thoroughly proven than here, because on August 9 our ships were forced to withdraw with most of the Marines' supplies, leaving the First Marine Division on Guadalcanal, as Mr. Miller puts it, "virtually a besieged garrison."

The Japs Sat Back

FORTUNATELY for the Marines and for our cause, the Japs failed to press their advantage by sea. On the island itself Jap optimism led to piecemeal attacks and overwhelming defeats by the tenacious Marine defenders.

It is to the everlasting credit of the Marines that, bombed by day, shelled by night, apparently abandoned by the high command, riddled by disease, they could not be dislodged, and that on Guadalcanal they won not only a battle but a campaign.

As one would expect from even a cursory knowledge of the campaign, the substantial defeats of the enemy on land and sea by November had made eventual victory certain for us. It was the enemy, not the Americans, who were sealed off by superior strength.

This decisive phase of the campaign takes about half of this volume. The rest is devoted to a detailed report on the eradication of the enemy from the island by a chiefly Army force. It will be of more interest to military students than to the average reader.

Taken as a whole, the book—well-mapped, indexed, illustrated and printed—is perhaps written too much in the military manner. But it does give us an authoritative, balanced and lucid description of a tough, important fight.

She Was Quite a Gal

'Percolating' Improved Lydia Pinkham's Brew

LYDIA PINKHAM IS HER NAME. By Jean Burton. Farrar, Straus. 279 pp. $2.75.

DESIST, kind sir, before consigning Lydia E. Pinkham to the realm of quacks, nostrum peddlers and snake oil venders.

Her far-famed vegetable compound for female ailments has actually passed muster with the pure food and drug people. Her honest and accurate pamphlet on the long-hidden facts of life preceded by half a century any other widely disseminated information on the subject.

And Lydia herself was quite a gal, deeply interested in all the problems of her day; an intellect, a wit, a debater, a crusader for the rights of females and other (then) suppressed segments of our population.

In fact, after reading this highly informative book, you will doubtless be singing the praises of the Lynn, Mass., housewife and student of medicine who saved many a terrified woman from sleepless nights by personally answering hundreds of thousands of very private letters, and by prescribing a concoction which seemingly has some slight beneficial effects at the most crucial moments in the lives of the gentler sex.

Lydia was the tenth of 12 children in a Quaker family which later rebelled against the Plain Sect. She and her sisters tested and tasted most of the intellectual and religious ferments of their day and aided both the abolitionist and the feminist causes.

New Start at 54

LYDIA PINKHAM (nee Estes) was herself a very beautiful, spirited and brilliant woman (see frontispiece); 5 feet 10, reddish hair, fine dark eyes, composed and striking looking.

She married a short, plump, mild, 29-year-old widower, Isaac Pinkham, and saw him through countless business pipe dreams and failures before deciding in her fifty-fourth year to assuage Isaac's final business collapse by marketing the compound she had previously given freely to all women in distress.

The compound never was a secret. It is composed of:

8 oz. True Unicorn Root
8 oz. False Unicorn Root
6 oz. Life Root
6 oz. Black Cohash
6 oz. Pleurisy Root
12 oz. Fenugreek Seed

Admittedly, the practice of "percolating" part of this concoction in the "finest spirits" available, thus giving the compound an 18 per cent alcoholic content, helped this militant temperance leader to sell her medicine in what was eventually enormous quantities.

At first, however, there were years of hardship. All four of Lydia's brilliant children (three sons and a daughter) helped "percolate," peddle and distribute. Level-headed Charles, aggressive Daniel, charming William and even baby Aroline wore out shoe leather disseminating handbills.

Ardent Greenbacker

IT WAS not until they discovered the value of newspaper advertising through a $60 ad Dan impulsively placed on the front page of the Boston Herald, that the Pinkhams uncovered the road to riches. Advertising managers will be happy to read that eventually the company was willing to spend three million dollars of its $3,800,000 gross on newspaper advertising. It still left a handsome profit.

JEAN BURTON
. . . Too much space to Dan

This was true even in the days when Mrs. Pinkham devoted large portions of her advertising to political propaganda, ardently supporting the Greenbacker movement and suggesting that the recalcitrants who didn't like unsecured paper money probably needed doses of her compound.

The pioneering venture of putting mother's picture on the labels and in the ads was a real stem-winder of an idea. But printing unsolicited testimonials chosen from the hundreds of thousands which poured into the Lynn headquarters was equally important to the success of Lydia's liquid gold mine.

The material gathered for this book is excellent. It reveals the dirt, ignorance, superstition and disease which bedeviled the allegedly happy Victorian era. But it also reveals how much more significant and instructive this chronicle could have been in the hands of a more capable writer. Unfortunately, the author devotes far too much space to the ordeals of Dan tramping the streets of Brooklyn with his handbills and to the embarrassing squabbles of the grandchildren fighting for control of the company. When Lydia drops out of the picture in 1883, the book blows up for want of a chief protagonist.

Nevertheless, despite flaws, this is a rich and rewarding picture of an era in which women should be glad not to have lived.

The Durable Sex

ON September 7, Harper will publish "Women Are Here to Stay: The Durable Sex in Its Infinite Variety Through Half a Century of American Life," by Agnes Rogers, who also assembled, "I Remember Distinctly."

Fifty years take in the era from bustles to falsies, from Lillian Russell to Ann Sheridan, from the well-turned out carriage with two silk-hatted men on the box, to jet propulsion, and the author makes the most of it.

One might almost say that Agnes Rogers picks up her sex where Lydia Pinkham left them at the turn of the century and brings them down to date, at which emancipated moment they hold in their own names 70 per cent of the wealth of the country, outlive their husbands by five years and have discarded four petticoats for (according to Hollywood reports) no underclothing whatsoever.

How about an equal-rights-for-men movement?—S. N.

Not the 'Why'

Smattering Of TV Will Equip Dad

TELEVISION WORKS LIKE THIS. By Jeanne and Robert Bendick. Whittlesey. 62 pp. $1.75.

PERHAPS because its authors wanted to appeal to both adult and juvenile readers, "Television Works Like This" is neither simple enough for a child nor comprehensive enough for an adult. It ranges in style from a sentence under "Sets and Props" which reads: "The people who design the stage sets for television shows have to think of some special things," to a statement under "The Transmitter" which reads: "The electrical impulses that are the television signal come up to the transmitter by coaxial cable from the control room or master control."

The book is profusely illustrated in the margins with faintly humorous black-and-white sketches which clarify the text considerably. The slim volume with its large, clear type should be very serviceable to fathers who want to learn just enough about TV so that they can give a superficial answer to Junior's question, or to juniors who aren't really terribly interested in technical matters. For anybody who wants to know WHY about anything pertaining to television, this book will scarcely serve at all.

However, for a superficial acquaintance with all phases of TV, from studio to home receiver, the book is fine and might well be offered by dealers as a courtesy to buyers of sets. Perhaps they will appreciate the unconscious humor in the chapter on "Tuning Your Set." After a discussion of "ghosts, "herringbone," "snow" and other distortions, the authors say cheerfully in their characteristically simple prose, "Usually these things hardly happen at all."—SONIA STEIN.

Novel of PW Spies Penned In Hospital

CALL IT TREASON, by George Howe. Viking. 344 pp. $3.

WINNER of the $15,000 Christophers Award for a novel "in accord with Christian principles and not against them," the plot deals with German prisoners of war who, for riches, faith or adventure, volunteer to spy behind the German lines for American G-2.

Author Howe is a Washington architect who served with an OSS detachment of G-2, Seventh Army, during the battle for France and Germany. His story, written at Emergency Hospital last year while convalescing from an auto accident, is based on an actual episode of Army Intelligence activities.

The novel is well done, authentic and exciting—at times. Unfortunately, no suspense can be built up for a climax ending—the author tipped his hand in his prologue.

Happy, a German medical corporal, the Tiger, a German Communist, and Paluka, a Russian captured while fighting for the Werhmacht, are the main characters. All are PWs who are parachuted behind the German lines in Bavaria in early 1945 to spot division command posts, gun positions, etc., for elimination by Seventh Army guns and planes.

The Gestapo gets on Happy's trail and follows him to Mannheim, where he is to swim the Rhine to reach American territory. Author Howe toured the area after the war to make sure of his geographic and historical facts. His detailed descriptions of trivial scenes, however, often slow up his meager plot.

In a Nutshell

MORNING IS FOR JOY, by Ruth Livingston Hill. Lippincott. $2.50.

MISS HILL, daughter of Grace Livingston Hill, oversimplifies. She has taken two simple people, and a simple and threadbare plot, and has produced a simple and uninteresting story. Joy Applegate meets Steve Donovan at a time when each is beset by many problems. Joy's ailing father has lost his business and even his home to a typical villain, and her kid brother seems headed for delinquency. Steve has an alcoholic mother and a slightly wayward sister. Together, Joy and Steve turn to religion, and through faith the bad become good, the sick become well, the villain is squelched and we leave the two simple souls to live happily ever after.

THE COSSACKS. By Leo Tolstoy. Pantheon. $1.75.

TOLSTOY wrote this short novel nearly 100 years ago out of his own experiences in the Caucasus. It's the romance of gentleman and milkmaid; the man surfeited with the empty life of Moscow and overjoyed at the simplicity of existence in a Cossack village. The penetrating characterizations help to redeem what has become an all too popular subject for novelists, and while this is not a great work, it shows signs of greatness. The translation is by Vera Traill.

THE OASIS. By Mary McCarthy. Random, $2.

IN 181 narrow pages undivided into chapters, Miss McCarthy has written a novel that is really a satirical essay on the hypothesis that people can be good and happy. The author, a critic for the more sophisticated magazines, uses a minimum of narrative, a trace of plot and a modicum of dialogue to explode the theory. Her characters are 50 assorted intellectuals who have created what they conceive to be a communal Utopia in an abandoned summer hotel on an isolated New England mountain top. Miss McCarthy writes polished phrases that sparkle with intellectual comedy, but the casual reader will have hard work following her argument. Her wit evokes an inward smile rather than a belly laugh.

You Bet Your Life That Uncle's Unsung Army Is On the Job . . .

Joseph Hanyok and Gerald S. O'Connor, radio engineers at the FCC monitoring station at Greenbelt, Md., check a tape recording of transmissions by a radio teletype station which had been reported interfering with a radio telephone station. They have already taken bearings on the interfering station by means of directional antennas

Three examiners in the Federal Trade Commission's radio and periodicals division, checking magazines for fraudulent advertisements, seem to have found a howler. If it's phony as well as funny, they'll start the "cease and desist" works moving against the advertiser. The examiners, left to right: Retta Conley, Mrs. Virginia Ingram, Mary Francis Eddins

By Benjamin C. Bradlee
Post Reporter

AN ARMY OF Washington "watchmen," more numerous than G-men or T-men, maintains a 24-hour guard against Nation-wide dangers more deadly than gangsters and more insidious than a fifth column.

The watchmen are the unsung men (and women) of the Food and Drug Administration, the National Bureau of Standards, the Federal Trade and Communications Commissions, the Public Health Service. Without knowing it, you probably trust them more than you would trust your best friend.

The dangers are deleterious foods, drinks and cosmetics, fraudulent advertising, faulty material construction, unpoliced airways and railways. The dangers are produced by a tiny minority of the Nation's business and professional men, a tiny but important minority.

Every citizen is familiar with the protection given him by police and firemen, but few have any idea of the far greater protection they get from these watchmen.

Faith in a Label

LET'S FACE IT. You know nothing about that aspirin you took last night. It looked like aspirin, the bottle was labeled "Aspirin," but how did you know it was aspirin?

And that steak you plan for lunch today? It might be horse meat. Worse, it might be meat from a sick horse.

What about the face cream you used last night? If you still have a face, there was no lye in it.

The last time you flew through a thunderstorm, the plane landed safely, but when the pilot radioed the airport for directions there might have been somebody jamming that frequency. But there wasn't.

Did you subscribe to magazines from a door-to-door salesman months ago and are you still waiting for the first issues?

Was the tetanus serum your daughter took after she stepped on the rusty nail pure? How do you know?

None of these things happened. That they didn't is due (1) to the reliability of the vast majority of businessmen and (2) to the army of Washington watchmen.

Food Is a Catchall

THANK YOUR STARS for being alive, and save some thanks for the unsung Government men who are responsible for that sigh of relief you just heaved.

They are the Food and Drug Administration inspectors, the Federal Communication Commission monitors, the National Bureau of Standards scientists, the Public Health Service inspectors, the Federal Trade Commission lawyers and the Interstate Commerce Commission and Civil Aeronautics Board Engineers.

More than to G-men, T-men, I-men and plain hardworking cops, you owe your lives to these men.

Thank the Food and Drug Administration's eagle-eyed inspectors. Last year, the things they kept out of your kitchen included:

1. Bread baked from flour stored in bags contaminated by rats.

2. A case of cream containing one mouse, and a case containing thousands of rat hairs.

3. Four million pounds of pepper clogged with rodent excreta.

4. Vinegar made from worm-infested apples.

5. Maggot-infested cherries.

6. Coffee beans swept from the filthy floors of ships and docks; cocoa beans that were wormy, moldy or contaminated with manure.

7. Soy sauce which contained up to 1200 parts per million of arsenic, and which poisoned more than 400 persons in Southern California alone.

8. Chili powder made from pods dried in the open air and contaminated by rabbits and other rodents.

9. Chocolate Easter eggs containing insect filth and bird feathers; licorice containing lice.

10. Whisky bottles containing ground glass.

The list is almost endless, but a comparative handful of 230 Food and Drug Administration inspectors, working out of 16 field laboratories, did the job. The entire FDA force, headed by Dr. Paul B. Dunbar here in Washington, consists of 1074 persons, operating on a budget of five million dollars.

Knockouts for Babies

IN THE field of medicine, the protection you received from the FDA is immeasurable. It is responsible for the purity and safety of all drugs, except for the vaccines and sera controlled by the Public Health Service.

Last year, the FDA kept these destructive items out of your medicine cabinet:

1. Turpentine labeled as castor oil. A Louisiana woman, suffering from a heavy cold which destroyed her sense of smell, became seriously ill when she swallowed the contents of such a bottle.

2. Infant suppositories which contained up to 223 per cent of the labeled amount of a barbiturate. Some children slept for 36 hours after the administration of only one such suppository.

3. Glucose solution which contained living organisms and made patients severely ill.

4. A drug used for diagnostic purposes which caused 4 deaths and 10 unfavorable reactions before FDA men investigated.

5. Illegally sold barbiturates. All suicides caused by overdoses of sleeping tablets are checked by FDA men. If the tablets were found to have been sold without prescription, the FDA prosecutes the seller.

6. A useless vinegar solution of saltpeter and digestive tablets sold as a remedy for diabetes. Two physician brothers, who distributed this drug, were fined more than $16,000.

7. Hundreds of quack medicines. The most fanciful claim of last year concerned an alleged rejuvenating cream which, the promoter said, was prepared from a formula that had been secured at great cost and hardship from members of nomadic Arabian tribes, who through its use had been able to maintain potency to extreme old age. Devoid of such properties, the preparation possibly could cause sterility.

8. A weird assortment of phony mechanical panaceas — Spectro-Chromes, Slanting Boards, Chlorogens, Expanding Hydrogen Applicators, Sinuothermic machines, master and magic cells and mechanical hearts.

They Monitor the Ads

THANK the Federal Trade Commission, too. It protects the health, safety, liberties, possessions, pocketbooks of everybody every day, especially the more gullible among us.

The FTC maintains scores of assistants whose job it is to read thousands of magazines and newspapers, listen to thousands of radio programs, and now watch hundreds of television programs. They look for gross and malicious exaggeration in advertisement. They look for false and misleading claims by manufacturers. And they find plenty.

Already this year, FTC readers and lawyers have made it impossible for you to buy:

1. Hot dogs which are "22 per cent juicier" because they are enclosed in natural animal intestine casings rather than artificial cellulose casings. A Chicago firm advertised its natural casings as making meats juicier, more flavorsome, more nutritious and containing more proteins and vitamin B1. The FTC found the claims to be false and ordered the firm to cease and desist.

2. Some underarm deodorants advertised as "not harmless," but which were. The FTC kept many of us away from doctors.

3. Door-to-door magazine subscriptions from untrustworthy salesmen. The FTC saved us thousands of dollars.

4. Anti-freeze solutions which play havoc with your automobile engine and water system. The FTC kept our cars out of the repair shops.

5. Home treatments which claimed to cure eye cataracts, ulcers, arthritis, neuritis, anemia, high blood pressure, apoplexy, paralysis, asthma, hay fever, rheumatism, neuralgia, pleurisy, appendicitis, bronchitis, boils, infections, baldness, bad posture, sluggishness, fatigue, kidney stones, constipation, diarrhea and hundreds of other conditions.

Thank the Federal Communications Commission, as well.

Twenty-one monitoring stations, one of them at Laurel, Md., keep the air free for the radio transmissions of ships and planes in distress.

Lost planes are given bearings from these stations.

Interference on any circuit is located from these stations and driven by the FCC from the air. Nearly 400 illegal radio operators have been tracked down by the FCC since the war. Each could have caused death by interfering with a distress broadcast.

A new cause of interference has been giving the FCC stations trouble this year—the radar cooking ranges which broil steaks in 60 seconds and fry eggs in less time than it takes to say "sunny side up." Radio waves from these stoves sometimes cause interference with radio transmission and reception.

Interference in a radio telegraph circuit from Miami, Fla., to Central America was found by the FCC to have its source in an industrial heating machine in Detroit last year.

The FCC also protects the public by cracking down on shysters and ambulance chasers who listen to police and fire radios for accident calls and race to the scene in search of a dishonest dollar.

Bulwark Against Plague

AND don't forget to thank the United States Public Health Service. Some measure of its success is the freedom of this country from the cholera, typhus and plague epidemics which rage in other countries whose emigrants constantly try to enter this one.

More than 18 million persons were inspected by the USPHA at the Mexican border alone.

At sea and air ports of entry, inspectors working under Washington's Leonard A. Scheele, the Surgeon General, stopped thousands of infested rodents and insects from entering the country. Insect egg masses were removed from the wings of planes from South America. Dead, but deadly, insects were found on planes coming in from the Orient. Anthrax spores were found in imported lather brushes at New York. More than 200 ships were deratted, and 50 per cent of the planes landing in America from foreign ports were "of entomological significance."

The safety given the world by the USPHS-controlled National Institute of Health at Bethesda is again immeasurable. There scientists search for the answers to cancer and many other diseases now listed as incurable.

The USPHS also guarantees the safety, purity and potency of all the so-called biologics, which save hundreds of lives daily. These medicines include all the vaccines and sera used to immunize and control disease. The tetanus serum which guarantees the life of your daughter after she steps on a rusty nail, is guaranteed by the Public Health Service.

The Federal stamp on your Sunday roast is your guarantee that you're getting what you ordered, and not a slab of horse meat, for instance. Inspector Louis O. Cox is shown stamping a cut of beef in a packing house

Virginia Affairs

Virginia Parents Given Cram Course

By Benjamin Muse
Publisher, the Manassas Messenger

THOSE who want to be prepared for the next round of school arguments in Virginia should get hold of a brochure just issued by the State Board of Education entitled, "Public Education in Virginia."

School problems will be gone over again in the near future in nine regional public hearings, and the Board of Education would like to have the public to do a little cramming before hand. So this 123-page brochure will be put into the hands of a selected group of interested citizens—those most likely to wade through it—and a synopsis will be given wider distribution.

The brochure contains an extremely valuable survey of school plant, administration and policies, present and proposed. The fear is that it will not be read by any great number of citizens.

The layman has complained in the past that his efforts to get simple answers to simple questions from school authorities are too often met with pedantic and irrelevant discourse, and he will be inclined to views this document with suspicion. But if he will persevere through a few pages of the usual platitudes, he will find it a very meaty and illuminating document.

Nevertheless, the brochure underlines still the difficulty of finding a common meeting ground between the professional educator and the school-conscious taxpayer. For instance, many a businessman will observe that he employs high school graduates who cannot write a legible note on an order form or add a column of figures, and will ask:

"Why should I pay more taxes for schools when they can't do a better job than that?"

He will not find the answer to that question in the Board of Education's brochure. It remains to be seen whether or not he will find the answer in the public hearings.

The people of Virginia have been doing a lot of thinking and a lot of talking about schools in the past few years. Even the exceptionally exciting political campaigns have hardly exceeded the subject of schools in day-in-day-out public interest.

What comes out in public hearings is only a small part of the thinking that has been going on. What is said there is not fully representative of public opinion. It is what is said on the front porch and at the drug store that counts.

What has led to this general inclination on the part of the public to scrutinize the school setup is mainly the reaction to higher taxes. When citizens are asked to pay increased taxes to meet school needs, the instinctive question is:

"What are we getting, and what are we going to get, for our money?"

And, with the tax bill in mind, the layman finds many things wrong with the school system. He expresses himself in a vernacular out of tune with the dissertations of educators, and he often does real injustice to the conscientious efforts of school officials. But he is likely to have an idea or two about principles and trends which the Board of Education will do well to take into account.

Probably the commonest front-porch complaint is that the schools are not adequately teaching the "three R's." No amount of "rich and stimulating experiences" in "comprehensive" high schools will satisfy the public until it feels that children are learning the fundamentals of reading, writing and arithmetic.

There is another item, of major importance to the school building program, which is not likely to be fully reflected in the public hearings. It centers around what I would call the Little Red School House principle.

There are many, especially among the older generation, who insist that the little one-teacher school of olden days did a better job of education than the big, streamlined schools of today. The generalization is, of course, an exaggeration, and it fails to take into account the vastly greater number of pupils who must be accommodated in this day of increased population and compulsory school attendance. The great majority of people are so situated as to find the big school both convenient for their children to attend and vastly richer in its facilities and courses of study than the smaller school.

There is, nevertheless, a widespread aversion to sending children on long bus trips to attend big, impersonal high schools away from the home community, and the feeling is basically sound. I recognize a mass of weighty opinion against me on this point, but there are also many thoughtful people who share the view that we are losing some irreplaceable values when we extinguish the last of the little schools, where teacher, pupil and parent, home and school, are all in intimate contact.

It would seem the part of wisdom, at any rate, not to assume that consolidation of schools represents unqualified progress, but to allow for generous exceptions in favor of small communities which are conspicuously loath to send their children elsewhere to school.

Aussies Win Doubles in Great Comeback

This Morning

With Shirley Povich

To Whom It May Concern:

DR. CARY MIDDLECOFF'S victory in the National Open apparently brought him no flood of offers to play exhibitions. The current issue of Golf World carries the advertisement: "Cary Middlecoff, U. S. Open champion, available for golf dates in Texas and on Pacific Coast in October."

POVICH

Lending credence to reports that Bill Veeck is eager to pull out of Cleveland is the fact that he faces a tremendous rebuilding job with the Indians . . . Hints of retirement by Joe Gordon haven't made the picture any brighter for Veeck . . . Tex Lawrence, Navy's varsity center of last year, threw some punches in an argument at the training camp of the Eastern College All-Stars who are drilling for their game with the New York Giants on Thursday night. Lawrence was piqued because he felt he was not getting a good shot at the center job . . . The American League's base-stealing championship apparently will be won by the lowest total of thefts in a couple of decades. Bob Dillinger of the Browns and Elmer Valo of the A's are now tied at the top with 12 s.b.'s each . . . Once upon a time the Washington Club stole eleven bases in one inning against the Cleveland Indians, with Steve O'Neill catching . . . The Baltimore Colts' front office is bragging that the club this year has $25,000 in the bank before the season opens, in contrast to last year when they were $10,000 in the red.

IN THE SAME WEEK that Bud Wilkinson, Oklahoma coach, distributes a pamphlet to alumni bemoaning the lack of veteran talent, Grantland Rice in a national mag selects Oklahoma to unseat Michigan and Notre Dame as national champions of 1949 . . . On the betting front: The Yankees are still even money to win the American League pennant, with Boston quoted at 3 to 1; Cleveland dropped to 10 to 1, and the other AL clubs "off the board." In the National League the Dodgers and Cardinals are still equal pennant choices at 6 to 5 . . . Lee Savold is a 4-to-7 favorite to beat Bruce Woodcock in England, and Jake La Motta is the 5-to-6 choice to retain his middleweight title against Marcel Cerdan . . . Rocky Graziano is a 13-10 favorite over Charley Fusari in their September 10 fight in New York . . . The recent Ezzard Charles-Gus Lesnevich fight was the lightest-betting heavyweight title fight in history, the bookmakers say . . . Wally Moses, oldest outfielder in the majors, will get his release from Connie Mack's A's at the end of the season, but it won't be a cold-blooded thing. Mack will designate Moses as manager of the A's Savannah, Ga., farm team . . . The University of Virginia will refuse to sign the N.C.A.A. purity code and risk being boycotted in schedule-making Virginia is reluctant because, it says, "we would insist on observing the code to the letter if we signed it. Other schools who sign won't."

THE MUCH-MISUNDERSTOOD golf terms—dormie, bogey and bisque—ought to be better defined. Only the player who is "up" can be dormie. Bisques are handicap strokes that can be taken on any holes when desired, in any amount. Bogey does not necessarily mean one over par. Bogey got its name from one Colonel Bogey, and to bogey a hole often meant to par it . . . Alex Carrasquel was given a "day" in Fort Worth recently to which his wife and baby were flown from Caracas, Venezuela, by the Venezuelan government with the cooperation of the U. S. Embassy in an effort to better relations between the two countries through sports . . . The Redskins' broadcasting network, now embracing 33 stations, will provide revenue that may offset the decline in ticket sales, with 14,000 season seats unsold . . . Maryland's "Big Mo," Ed Modzelewski, 220-pound fullback from Natrona, Pa., is outweighed 25 pounds by his kid brother, "Little Mo." The latter, a tackle, is weighing offers from Maryland, Notre Dame, Pittsburgh and Ohio State on a current inspection tour of those colleges . . . A reader complains of the islation of Maryland's new 42,000-seat stadium and its lack of roadway entrances, writing, "they must be catering to the helicopter trade." . . . For the haughty National Football League, it was no comfort that the two All-America Conference teams, the Los Angeles Dons and the Frisco Forty-Niners, drew 83,000 to an exhibition in L. A. where the Redskins and Rams drew only 60,000.

AFTER THE FIRST excitement of the Yankees-Giants Johnny Mize deal subsided, it was learned that the Yanks paid only $25,000 for the big first baseman, plus taking over his $40,000-a-year contract . . . Luke Easter, giant colored first baseman brought up from San Diego by the Indians, is one of the few players who ever lodged a home run in the centerfield bleachers of the Polo Grounds . . . Fred Pignon, golf writer for the London Daily Mail, tees off against the American PGA for barring Bobby Locke from its tournaments. He calls the PGA action "high-handed" and declares the group is too powerful an influence in U. S. golf. "In Britain," he writes, "professional golfers are regarded as servants, respectable servants mark you, of the game. I agree with Locke that if American pro golf is in such a bad way they can't make a tournament successful without him, then they are in a bad way indeed." . . . Jimmy Cooper is given better than a slight chance to win his fight with Bantamweight Champ Manuel Ortiz tomorrow night at Griffith Stadium, according to the newest odds, 12 to 5, in favor of Ortiz . . . The Nats will build their 1950 team around four players, Sam Dente, Eddie Robinson, Eddie Yost and Ed Stewart, with all others labeled as expendable . . . Joe Louis gave short answers recently when asked if he would come out of retirment. "No" he said. When asked why, he expended only two words: "Too old."

Lanier and Martin Drop Suit On Baseball Reserve Clause

New York, Aug. 27 (AP).—Max Lanier and Fred Martin, the St. Louis Cardinals' returned Mexican League "jumpers," today decided to drop their $2,500,000 suit against organized baseball.

The two Cardinal pitchers made known their intentions in a letter to Fred Saigh, president of the National League club. Saigh said the two players would make a formal request for dismissal of the case Monday.

The case of Lanier and Martin along with that of Danny Gardella's had been given priority action in Federal Court here. The suits of the three had been placed at the bottom of the November calendar after the attorneys for the ball players had asked for preference.

Gardella's suit for $300,000 in damages is the only one left challenging baseball's controversial reserve clause.

Gardella, one-time outfielder for the New York Giants, is asking damages on the grounds that he was deprived of making a livelihood by organized baseball. He was banned from organized baseball when he went to the Mexican League in 1946.

Gardella's suit is aimed at the reserve clause which binds a player to the club with which he first signs a contract until he is sold, traded or released.

His case differed from that of the two Cardinals in that he had not signed a contract with the Giants when he accepted a Mexican League offer. Both Lanier and Martin had signed contracts and were playing with the Cardinals when they "jumped" the club in '46. Both returned to the Cards when Baseball Commissioner A. B. Chandler lifted the suspensions on the "jumpers." Gardella has not sought reinstatement.

Giants Drop Rookie

Saranac Lake, N. Y., Aug. 27 (AP).—The New York Giants of the National Football League today released Bill Ward, a rookie center.

Yanks Win On Byrne's 2-Hitter, 4-0; Bosox Romp

Cleveland, Aug. 27 (AP).—Tommy Byrne, the unpredictable left-hander, pitched the New York Yankees to a sparkling 4-0, two-hit triumph over the world champion Cleveland Indians today.

A record Ladies' Day crowd of 82,747 fans, including 60,887 paying customers, watched Byrne outduel Early Wynn.

The triumph enabled the Yanks to maintain their slim one and one-half game lead over the Boston Red Sox who trounced the White Sox in Chicago, 7-2.

Ken Keltner and Dale Mitchell collected the Cleveland hits, singles in the fifth and sixth innings, respectively.

Bryne walked six to run his season's total to 139, hit a batter and struck out four in gaining his eleventh victory and the third shutout of the season.

Wynn matched Byrne's effectiveness until the seventh inning when the Yanks scored all their runs. Bobby Brown tripled with the bases loaded and then scored the fourth run after Charley Silvera flied out.

All Healthy, They'd Probably Finish 8th

Cleveland, Aug. 27 (U.P.).—Manager Casey Stengel of the New York Yankees said today that Pitchers Allie Reynolds and Fred Sanford will hurl tomorrow in the doubleheader against the White Sox in Chicago "even if I have to roll them out to the mound in a wheelchair."

Stengel, whose Yankees still are clinging to first place despite a succession of more than 60 incapacitating injuries and ailments this season, gave the following clinic report for the club as of today:

Reynolds sinus infection, Sanford bad back, Pitcher Duane pilette influenza with 103 degree temperature, Ace Relief Pitcher Joe Page hay fever, Outfielder Charley Keller influenza, Outfielder Joe DiMaggio heel sore again and arthritis in shoulder, Stengel, nerves, headaches and incipient ulcers.

Ted Williams Hits 2 More

Chicago, Aug. 27 (AP).—The Boston Red Sox combined the efforts of Ted Williams, Vern Stephens and Chuck Stobbs for a 7-2 victory over the Chicago White Sox today to remain a game and a half behind the pacemaking New York Yankees.

Williams hit two homers, his thirty-third and thirty-fourth, to pull into a round-tripper deadlock with Stephens, who belted his thirty-fourth. Stobbs pitched his ninth victory, the 20-year-old bonus southpaw stopping the White Sox on six hits.

The Red Sox scored three times in the fifth to overcome a 1-0 White Sox edge. Bud Souchock, who collected half of the Chicago hits scored on a single by Cass Michaels and Stobbs' throwing error.

Birdie Tebbetts pushed Umpire Red Jones in protesting the official's safe call on the play and was bounced. Matt Batts took over for the ousted Tebbetts.

In the fifth Dominic DiMaggio singled and Williams hammered his first homer. Stephens followed with his round tripper off Howie Judson.

Batts' fly in the sixth enabled Al Zarilla to score Boston's fourth run. Chicago also scored in its half, Dave Philley going across on Michaels' second single.

In the Boston eighth Stobbs and Johnny Pesky singled, both scoring ahead of Williams when Ted walloped a second homer.

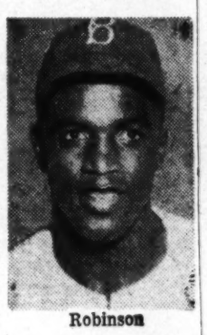
Jackie Tells Own Story

Robinson's Team Stands By Him

By JACKIE ROBINSON
(As Told to Ed Reid)

WELL, the ground didn't drop out from under me when it was announced that I had been signed to play with Montreal. The first reaction of the newspapermen was surprise, of course, and I suppose this was reflected all over the country.



Robinson

But when Branch Rickey, jr. introduced me all around, I felt good right clear down to my toes. I wondered just what it was I had been worried about.

Was it a fear that I would not make good?

No, it was'nt that. I knew that I was as good a ball player and as good a man as any one. It is an unexplainable thing every Negro has felt, but it is something that vanishes with the first firm handclasp that says:

"You're okay by me, buddie, I hope I'm okay by you. Now let's get out there and win this ball game."

I guess you might say then that this handclasp is something like democracy. It is something that should be extended to every minority group in the world. Anyhow, that's how I feel about things.

When Rachel and I went back to DeGaspe st. that afternoon the sun was really shining. It's been shining ever since. I went on the radio that night and said "hello" to the French people of Montreal. I learned to say hello in French and got a big kick out of that radio appearance.

I CROSSED the first bridge toward the major leagues when I went to Jersey City with Montreal for my first game. I had a lucky debut, getting four hits, including a home run, in that first game.

I'll never forget how happy Clay Hopper, the manager, was. There were 25,000 people on hand to see the game. I was nervous, but that soon wore off as my bat started hitting that leather. I remember that I scored four runs.

That year I led the International League in batting with an average of .349.

It must have made an impression because I joined the Dodgers in 1947. They agreed to pay me $5,000 for the year, but after the first game I wondered whether I was worth a plugged nickel.

In my first game at Ebbets Field against the Braves the opposing pitcher, Johnny Sain, really threw his curves against me

Furillo, Cox Homer to Set Club Record

Brooklyn, Aug. 27 (AP).—The Brooklyn Dodgers erupted for six runs in the sixth inning—their entire output—to defeat the tail-end Chicago Cubs, 6-1, behind the nine-hit pitching of veteran Preacher Roe.

Consecutive home runs by Carl Furillo and Billy Cox climaxed the big Dodger sixth. Furillo's blow was the club's 123rd of the season, surpassing its previous season record of 122 established in 1930.

Waren Hacker held the Dodgers

With one out, Marv Rackley singled and Duke Snider walked.

Jackie Robinson then lined to left but Hank Sauer misjudged the ball and it went over his head for a double, Rackley and Snider scoring. Hacker, backing up home, fielded the relay and threw to second attempting to pick off Robinson who had rounded the bag. The toss was wild and Robinson scored. Gil Hodges followed with a single and Furillo and Cox with their homers.

The Cubs scored their lone run in the ninth on Roy Smalley's double and Herm Reich's single.

Robertson Hits 11th Homer

Hutchinson Halts Nat Rally, Tigers Win 6th in Row, 7-6

Special to The Washington Post

Detroit, Aug. 27.—The Nats wasted a lot of heroics today, but finally bowed, 7-6, to the redhot Tigers, who now have won six straight in a last-ditch bid for a lofty American League finish.

The defeat for the Nats marked the sixteenth time in 20 starts they have bowed to the Bengals and pushed them deeper into the cellar.

Trailing 7-4 in the eight, with Catcher Aaron Robinson's two-run homer hurting the most, the Nats knocked Hal Newhouser out of the box but coult not quite kayo his successor, Fred Hutchinson.

They had the bases loaded, one run in and only one out when Hutch made Pinch-hitter Buddy Lewis hit into a double play. In the top of the ninth, Sherry Robertson banged out his eleventh home run to pull the score to its final count.

Sherry had come into the game when Sam Dente received a spike wound above his right knee in the eighth.

The Nats came from behind to take a short-lived 2-1 lead in the second on Eddie Robinson's single, a double by Al Kozar and the combination of an infield out and a long fly ball. But the Tigers tied it up in the third and then went ahead to stay in the fifth.

Neil Berry, a Washington thorn all day, opened the third with his first of four hits, was sacrificed to second and scored on Eddie Lake's

Double Victory Stretches Lead To Two Games

New York, Aug. 27 (AP).—The St. Louis Cardinals stretched their National League lead to two games over the Brooklyn Dodgers today, taking both ends of a doubleheader from the New York Giants, 5-2 and 11-2, while the Dodgers beat Chicago.

Six home runs, a triple play and the five- and six-hit pitching of Fred Martin and Harry Brecheen, respectively, highlighted the Cardinal triumphs.

The Cards belted four of their homers in the first game and also pulled their second and the National League's fifth triple play of the season.

Two for Stan Musial

Stan Musial socked two of the homers and Chuck Diering and Enos Slaughter one each to help Martin best Lefty Dave Koslo. Musial's pair of round-trippers increased his output to 25. The barrier blows accounted for all of the Cards' runs.

The Cards executed the triple play in the third inning. Hank Thompson was on second, Whitey Lockman on first and Bobby Thomson at the plate. With the count 3 and 2 on Thomson, both runners broke with the next pitch which Thomson lined to Shortstop Red Schoendienst. Schoendienst stepped on second to double Thomson and tossed to first to triple off Lockman.

St. Louis piled up an 8-0 lead in the first three innings of the nightcap, routing starter Sheldon Jones with five runs in the third. Ron Northey and Rocky Nelson poled three-run homers, Nelson's blow coming in the ninth off Clint Hartung.

Despite the big lead the 28,878 fans remained in their seats as Brecheen sent the Giants back to the bench without a hit for 6 2-3 innings. A couple of brilliant plays by rookie Second Baseman

Bromwich, Sidwell Lose 2 Sets, Then Whip Yanks

By Gayle Talbot

Forest Hills, N. Y., Aug. 27 (AP).—A pair of Australian tennis stars with hearts as big as kangaroos made one of the most dramatic comebacks in Davis Cup history here today to avert what loomed as certain defeat and keep the 1949 challenge round alive.

Two sets down and seemingly outclassed, John Bromwich and Billy Kidwell brought a terrific demonstration from a crowd of 8000 as they fought grimly back to square the struggle and finally subdue the veteran American champions, Billy Talbert and Gardner Mulloy, 3—6, 4—6, 10—8, 9—7, 9—7.

For fully five minutes after Sidwell had blazed a placement for the winning point, the crowd stood in the big stadium and shouted and applauded. The cheers followed the two tired Aussies until they had disappeared under the marquee.

Had they lost the matches would have been decided, 3 to 0, for the United States. Instead, the scrappers from Down Under still will have at least a fighting chance of taking the International trophy back home in tomorrow's concluding singles.

Singles Decide It Today

The first match will find Ted Schroeder battling Frank Sedgman, the youthful Australian champion, and the final tilt will pair Pancho Gonzales, the American champion, against Sidwell. The Americans will be slightly favored in both.

Few matches ever played anywhere packed more drama than today's. In the end the diminutive Sidwell was the hero. He played magnificent tennis where it counted and for long periods actually "carried" Bromwich, who for a decade has been recognized as a master of doubles.

Mulloy, at 35 much the oldest man on the court, was the American who finally faltered in the 3-hour-and-25-minute struggle in intense heat. The sixty-ninth and deciding game saw him fail to hold his service for the fourth time in the five sets, and that time it was fatal. Talbert was the only one of the four who did not lose his delivery once during the long afternoon.

The record book showed the match to have been the second longest doubles contest in cup history. Back in 1922, Bill Tilden and R. Norris Williams took 81 games to down another pair of Australians, J. O. Anderson and J. P. Hawkes. No historian was on hand to say whether that one matched today's epic in thrills and great tennis.

The chances are against it. It is doubtful that any two tennis players before ever appeared to have been so thoroughly beaten

Hoyas, Terps, Colonials Launch Grid Drills This Week

On the Flanks

Redskin Ends Are Big, Fast And Rough

(This is the final in a series weighing the Washington Redskins, position by position).

OCCIDENTAL COLLEGE, Calif., Aug. 27 — Everybody had one objection or another to Washington Redskin personnel in 1948, but nobody could find fault with the ends. Washington's wingmen, as a matter of fact, were a match for any in the National Football League.

The '48 situation on the flanks still holds. Four of last season's finest are back, with only Paul McKee and Doug Turley missing. McKee was a handy man to have around with his size, pass-grabbing ability and defensive work, but any one of three newcomers should more than fill his shoes.

First there is Sam Goldman, a 235-pound acquisition from the Chicago Cardinals, the rawboned veteran from Howard University of Alabama promises to be one of the finest defensive ends ever fielded by the 'Skins. He is as fast and rugged as they come.

Herb Shoener, whose early-season injury lost him to the Redskins in '48, is completely healed and ready to go. He is a 207-pounder from Iowa.

And finally there's Ed Berrang, the only rookie on the squad, but a very likely looking one. At the moment he's training with the Eastern All-Stars for their date with the New York Giants Tuesday, but he'll rejoin the Skins in time for their Memphis exhibition against the Chicago Bears on September 4.

The ability of the four holdover ends of last season can hardly be questioned. Joe Tereshinski can lay claim to being the roughest-toughest wingman on both offense and defense in the league. Hugh Taylor and Hal Crisler are pass receivers with very few peers, and Crisler doubles well as a safety man on pass defense. Jim Peebles, besides doing the kicking off, is a tough man to budge with his 235-pound bulk.

The sad part of the end situation is that one of these excellent prospects must be disposed of to get the club within the 32-player limit.

Tereshinski sums up Washington's ends, and their confidence, with the remark: "We're as big as any of 'em. We'll catch as many passes, too."

Redskins Like Rookie Stout

OCCIDENTAL COLLEGE, Calif., Aug. 27.—They may have a little trouble transporting him from place to place, but the Washington Redskins seem willing to go to a deal of trouble for the services of Pete Stout.

Stout

The handsome rookie fullback from Texas Christian University gets carsick. "Maybe we should buy him a horse," suggests Head Coach Billick Whelchel.

The fact is that the Redskins have already "put out" considerably for Stout. They gave us draft rights to Mississippi's sensational passer, Charley Conerly, to get Stout along with Howie Livingston. They apparently like their bargain.

Stout is 205 pounds of fast, side-stepping and hard hitting ball player. At Texas Christian he was the first backfield man in 14 years to captain the club, and in his last two years took runner-up honors behind Doak Walker in Southwest Conference scoring.

Because of his service in the Marines, Stout's collegiate career was spread over six years at both T. C. U. and North Texas Aggies. He saw action at Iwo Jima before returning to TCU in 1947 and earning invitations to both the East-West Shrine game and the Collegiate All-Star game a year later.

Both extra-curricula bids he turned down, the first because he hadn't been to his Fort Worth home in six Christmases, and the second because he was running a boys camp right up to the time he joined the Redskins.

Fumble - weary Redskin coaches liked Stout's movements the first time they saw him.

"He handles the ball like a second baseman," one of them remarked.—BILL BURNETT

Georgetown Gets Jump On Tuesday

By Morris Siegel
Post Reporter

Football, which has been rapping on our doors for the past few days, barges right in this week.

Washington's two major schools —Georgetown and George Washington—and Maryland, located only a quarterback sneak outside the District Line, all start preparations for their September 24 opening games.

The Hoyas get the jump on the practice derby. They'll start their twice daily sessions Tuesday morning. Willing, but restrained by Southern Conferences rules from doing anything about it, George Washington and Maryland must wait until Thursday before receiving their two-a-day treatment.

Another football neighbor, Navy, has been at it for a week already and will probably be ready to butt heads by tomorrow or Tuesday at the latest.

The Hoyas, Terrapins and Colonials expect to muster approximately 175 players at their respective sessions. Coach Bob Margarita is ready to welcome 50 Georgetown candidates at Hoya Field, Coach Bo Rowland will glad hand the same number of GW hopefuls at Frog Island while Coach Jim Tatum is impatiently standing by to greet 75 Terrapin huskies at Maryland.

Has Tough Slate

Of the three schools, only George Washington would like to take up where it left off last fall. Under the wily little Rowland, in his first year at the helm, the Colonials climaxed their four-win, six-loss season by clipping Georgetown for the first time in 55 years.

Instead of a "Fighting Fifteen," the Colonials should be slightly better equipped this season, but still not enough to cope with a man-sized schedule which includes Georgetown, Maryland, Kansas and Virginia.

Biggest problem confronting Rowland and his staff is Tailback Andy Davis, freshman star of last year. The blonde running-passing ace of '48 underwent a knee operation this summer and only the first scrimmage will tell how much help, if any, he'll be to the Buff and Blue.

Most likely prospects up from the frosh ranks are backfielders Bob Cilento, a 200-pound Newark passer; Lou Ciarrocca, 175-pounder from Newark who specializes in ball-totin', and Johnny Pivman, 180-pound Wayland, Mass., tailback. Don Druckenmiller, 205-pound journeyman center who was idle last year recouping from a 1947 injury, returns to help bolster a line which need sbolstering.

Hoyas Have New Staff

Georgetown's Hoyas will operate with an entire new coaching setup and a new system. Young Margarita, down from Yale where he was backfield coach, succeeds Jack Hagerty, now athletic director. Margarita's is no easy task.

He faces Holy Cross, Maryland and Boston College in that order. On his side, however, is Billy Conn, a junior speedster who's rated one of the best running backs this side of the Pacific Ocean.

Operating from the "T" instead of the single-wing and spread, Conn gives the Hoyas the outside attack they'll need. Frosh graduates who are counted on are Jack Juen, Bob Deacon and Frank Mattingly, quarterbacks and passers.

Maryland is better equipped than any of the local schools. Split-T Tatum has surrounded himself with a slew of backfield swifties to give his offense the speed it lacked last year.

Ed Modzelewski, already the subject of a colossal buildup, is the fullback. He's 220, fast as a sprint man, and quite a ballplayer. Joe Tucker, jr., will probably run the Tatum-T with swifties such as Walt Boeri, Lynn Davis, Joe Kuchta, Vern Seibert, Buck Early and Bob Shemonski supplying the speed.

Tackle Ray Krouse, as good as he wants to be and when he wants to be he's terrific, and Bob Ward, watchcharm guard, bulwark what figures to be a powerful line.

14-Year-Old Wins Girls Tennis

Philadelphia, Aug. 27 (AP). Fourteen-year-old Maureen Connolly of San Diego, Calif., today won the 32nd annual girls national tennis championship by beating Laura Lou Jahn, Palm Desert, Calif., 6-4, 6-3.

Top-seeded Miss Connolly won the title in her first attempt. She succeeds Beverly Baker of Santa Monica, Calif., who didn't defend, and is the fourth Californian in succession to win the coveted crown.

SMALL AND FAST—These four players will be among Navy's most active backfield men in the approaching football season. They are light but fast. Portmaker Adds to Lead At Keswick

By Harry De Mawby, Jr.

Keswick, Va., Aug. 27.—Portmaker, Dr. and Mrs. Alvin I. Kay's Washington-owned entry, still holds a good lead for the conformation hunter honors at the end of the second day of the Keswick horse show being held here this weekend.

The "Port," expertly handled by the Alex Calverts of Warrenton, Va., added place awards in the hunter hacks and ladies' hunters and a third on the middle and heavyweight hunters to his open hunter victory of yesterday to gain a 11½-point score.

Mrs. Gregory McIntosh's Air Sarazan, a much improved performer, has 8 points in the runner-up position along with Shirley McGavock's Baby Seal, last week's Hot Springs horse show hunter champion.

Morton W. (Cappy) Smith's Fair in War sneaked into a narrow one-half lead in the tough competition of the green hunter division after claiming the blue ribbon in the green hunter hacks, due very much to the expert showmanship of his owner-rider. No Specialist Role for Him

Drew, Navy Conversion Ace, Eager to Carry Ball, Too

ANNAPOLIS, MD., Aug. 27 (AP).—Roger Drew of Navy wouldn't mind very much if people just forget he kicked those three extra points that tied Army last year.

He'd rather carry the ball than kick it.

And the square-built, Shakespeare - reading midshipman from suburban Chicago is in the midst of a scorching three-way battle for fullback on Navy's 1949 eleven.

"The kid is so fascinated by the overall game of football that he refuses to be tagged a specialist," Coach George Sauer said today.

"He wants to play fullback, run with that ball and block," Sauer added, without a trace of disappointment.

"A couple of other fullbacks I know had beter start worrying about this placekicker of ours."

Drew, an anonymous man in uniform most of last season, is a compact 180 pounds. He stands only 5 feet 8 and has to look up to everyone else in Navy's backfield cadre.

"Awfully small," Sauer commented, "but sure wound tight."

The 21-year-old second classman who played a year at Illinois before getting an academy appointment came almost from nowhere to earn his letter in 1949. Until mid-season he toiled with the junior varsity. Then little Jimmy Wills, who was kicking points after Navy's scarce touchdowns, hurt his leg.

Drew was called up to the varsity. Eight times he trotted on the field and eight times the ball soared through the uprights. His last three points-after-touchdown put the climactic touch on Navy's 21-21 upset stalemate with Army.

That was just about the sum of Drew action. Now he'd just as soon not be specialist, thank you.

Drew started playing football in grammar school. He was named all-suburban fullback and won All-State honorable mention at New Trier Township High School, near Chicago.

He has two more years at the Naval Academy, then wants to be a flier. In spare moments he likes to play chess, read Shakespeare—and think about playing fullback.

Snead Tops Golf's Payroll

Snead also retained his Vardon trophy lead with an average of 69.49 strokes for 69 rounds.

Meanies Wrestle Here Wednesday

Two of wrestling's most colorful performers will share top billing at Turner's Arena Wednesday when Argentine Rocca and Laverne Baxter appear in the double windup.

Baxter, the mat meanie who left his mark on Referee Benny Bortnick recently, meets Monsieur Paris, French grappler.

Rocca, undefeated South American, will meet a man only slightly less rough than Baxter, when he tangles with big Joe Corbett.

Middies Hold 1st Scrimmage

Annapolis, Md., Aug. 27.—Coach George Sauer sent his 72-man Navy football squad through the first full-scale scrimmage of the pre-season drills here this afternoon.

The session saw four different groups working against each other for periods of about 20 minutes each under the day's broiling sun, but the drill was a spirited one despite the heat and the Navy mentor said simply that he was "pleased" with the results.

Sharp tackling featured the afternoon's work and the Academy grid staff saw "considerable improvement" in the short passing game.

The scrimmage climaxed Navy's first week of Fall practice. The two-day workout scheduled will continue until after September 1, Sauer said.

South Central climaxed last night's events by winning the 300-meter medley relay in the meet record time of 3:33.4. The Middle Atlantic team, with Lieut. Elvin Crowder of Washington, coming strong, finished second.

Traps Crown To Tennille Third Time

Vandalia, Ohio, Aug. 27 (AP).—National Doubles Championship Mercer Tennille of Shreveport, La., a silver-haired insurance man, broke 96 of 100 to win the title for the third time in four years in the Grand American trapshoot today. M. W. Ray of John Day, Oreg., was second with 95.

Seven other amateurs tied for third at 94. They were Harvey H. Blair of Wichita, Kan.; Julius Petty of Stuttgart, Ark.; Vic Reinders of Waukesha, Wis.; H. W. Dirlam of Truman, Wis.; Joe Heistand of Hillsboro, Ohio; Dick Shaughnessy of Dedham, Mass. and Bob Allen of Des Moines, Iowa.

Mrs. Isaac Andrews of Spartanburg, S. C., won the women's national doubles with 84 of 100.

Charles Mason of Dallas, Tex., won the professional championship by breaking 19 of 20 in a shootoff to defeat Rudy Etchen of Los Angeles, Calif. They had tied at 94 of 100 in the regular event.

Mason's only miss in the shootoff came when he neglected to load one barrel of his over-and-under shotgun.

Heistand Over-all Champ

Shaughnessy, Heistand and C. W. Jones, Knoxville, Tenn., tied with Gene Wenz of Louisville, Ky., for second place in the all-around with 385 of 400.

Heistand won the over-all championship by breaking 977 of 1000, the competition including 600 targets at 16 yards, 100 doubles and 300 at handicap.

Etchen won both ends of the professional race, taking the all-around championship with 385 of 400, and the over-all laurels with 965 of 1000.

The final event of the grand program—the Vandalia Open handicap which was open to both professionals and amateurs—went to Don Hawksley, 36-year-old sporting goods store owner of Streator, Ill., who broke 99 of 100 from 20 yards.

Mrs. Andrews a Winner

Hawksley was tied in the regular event by Harold R. Schlesselman, airport operator of Mankato, Minn., who fired from 19 yards. In the shootoff, Hawksley broke 23 to his opponent's 21.

Mrs. Ike Andrews of Spartanburg, S. C., wound up as the women's overall champion of the grand, breaking 930 of 1000 targets to win the first leg on a new $2600 trophy donated by Mr. and Mrs. Clyde King of Atlanta, Ga.

Webb's 88 Tops D. C. Trapshooters

Dayton, Ohio, Aug. 27.—Ohmer Webb, Washington, who drew down $5400 for his Grand American preliminary handicap victory here Thursday, largest single purse in the history of trapshooting, posted an 88 to lead D. C. gunners in the national doubles championship.

'Skins Gloat Over Defeat of Rams, 34-28

By Bill Burnett
Post Reporter

En Route to Denver, Aug. 27.—The Washington Redskins fought off a tendency to concede themselves the National Football League title today as they headed for Denver and a Tuesday night Lions.

But after their 34-28 triumph over the Los Angeles Rams Friday night Washington pro gridmen had a right to gloat. As 64,272 customers looked on at Memorial Coliseum, the 'Skins won the hard way —by coming up from 14 points behind.

They won one of the hardest fought games ever played in Los Angeles, according to long-time observers, with an amazing show of offensive strength and they won with a well-coordinated combination of veterans and first-year men.

In the fifth renewal of the Los Angeles Times Charities, Inc., classic, the Redskins came off with no injury worse than a bruise, in violent contrast to last year's preseason opener. That was when four standout backfield men were injured so severely that their use was limited the rest of the year.

Sports writers covering the clash picked Dan Sandifer, second year halfback from L. S. U., as the outstanding player on the field and nobody could argue with that. Dan was even better than in last year's game.

In that one he returned a kickoff 87 yards for a touchdown. Last night he went 94 yards. It was just one of three scores for the 190-pound speedster. He started the scoring in the middle of the first period when he took Sammy Baugh's 5-yard pass in the end zone, capping a 64-yard Redskin drive.

In the third quarter, on the kickoff, after a 65-yard scoring run by the Rams' T. V. Smith, Sandifer got off his 94-yarder.

Finally, as the third quarter waned, he went over on an 11-yard bit of broken field running that had the fans screaming. As though he hadn't done enough, he was in there on defense, too. He knocked down a Ram pass with such vigor in the fourth quarter that he knocked the wind out of himself.

The combined use of Sammy Baugh and Harry Gilmer in the quarterback slot pointed up the 'Skins "little old, little new" policy. Sam started off by completing his first seven passes, wound up with 13 completions in 17 tries. Gilmer, going in with the Skins trailing, 21-13, in the third stanza, picked up 70 yards on three completions in five passes, meanwhile doing a brillian job of fielding generalling.

Gilmer was at the helm, with Wake Forest's Harry Dowda running and grabbing passes, as the Tribe moved 70 yards for Sandifer's third touchdown. He was in there again, with the Rams leading, 28-29, on a Waterfield-to-Fears-to-Shaw forward pass and lateral play, when Washington scored the most bitterly contested touchdown of the night.

From his own 24, Gilmer led the Skins to midfield, but there he ran out of downs and Dick Poillon kicked to Elroy (Crazy Legs) Hirsch. The former Wisconsin ace was hit like a pile driver by Herb Shoener, who kept right on going to recover the ball on the Ram 12 when Hirsch fumbled.

Dowda and Rob Goode were sent at the line by Gilmer, but on fourth down the Skins were a yard short of a first on the Los Angeles 3. Gilmer solved that by hurling his tiny frame at the Rams on a quarterback sneak.

Washington was still 2 yards away from a touchdown, however. Big Ed Quirk came within a foot of going over, but on the next play Gilmer bobbled the ball in the handoff and he was 2 yards away again. Quirk picked up one of them at center and finally, on fourth down, Goode plowed over right guard for the score.

It looked like Los Angeles' 28-27 lead at that point, the result of Poillon's low placement after Sandifer's 94-yard-run, would stand up. Neither team was getting very far until Washington's fourth-string quarterback, Bob Hainlen, kicked out of bounds on the Rams' 21.

Jim Hardy tried his first pass for the Rams and Howie Livingston of the Redskins loved it. He snatched the leather out of Bob Shaw's groping hands on the 34 and went all the way to the winning touchdown with several perfect blocks.

Baugh Figures He's Good 'Until 55' With Gilmer Understudy

En Route to Denver, Aug. 27. "Now I can play until I'm 55 years old." That was 35-year-old Sammy Baugh's greeting to Clark Shaughnessy, his former mentor, after the Washington Redskins whipped the Los Angeles Rams last night, 34-28. Baugh referred to the outstanding performance of his understudy, Harry Gilmer.

"With Gilmer running the team and passing like that," the lanky Texan drawled, "all they will need me for is to hold the ball while Dick Poillon kicks the extra points. I oughta be able to do that for 20 more years."—BILL BURNETT.

Even a Hardhead Has Something to Groan About

By Ralph Murdock

ICHTHYOLOGISTS have discovered that fish make all sorts of weird grunts and groans.

Murdock

croakers, usually referred to as just plain hardheads. Even a miniature (only 3 inches long) when hooked can do plenty of croaking for his size.

On top of that it croaks with a piece of shrimp in its mouth that it can't even swallow.

Porpoises have been known to make noises that correspond to those of a ship's screws. The toadfish, the angler's killjoy, has the reputation of being the noisiest individual of all. It can groan, grunt, growl, grate and hum. The trout or weakfish makes a croaking noise very similar to the hardhead, while the flying robin fish gives a unique interpretation of a robin redbreast in a chirping mood.

FIVE MACHINISTS from Shop 18 of the Naval Gun Factory in Washington landed 14 jumbo-size hardheads off Herring Bay. They were Ed Duninger, Ralph Gingles, Charles Babbitt, Keith Lomax and William "Pop" Connor. Strong west winds forced the anglers to return to port when one of their crew suffered a slight case of seasickness. He wanted to be alone.

Five anglers from the District, George Ross, his son, George, jr.; Mickey Ross, Gladys Ross and Betty Herbert and three guests, Mr. and Mrs. E. G. Volimer and their son, Lee, from Detroit, Mich., spent a pleasant afternoon off Holland Point Bar, pulling in 50 big spot. They were aboard the Susie L., which was manned by Capt. Milton Deale, who hails from Deale, Md.

Judge Otis Bland, Congressman from the First District of Virginia and chairman for the past 14 years of the House Committee on Merchant Marine and Fisheries, has announced that he will not seek his reelection and will retire. His work on bills of interest to anglers and commercial fishermen is well known.

A DYED-IN-THE-WOOL angler must have patience. Here is concrete proof, where a dismal trip was turned into a successful one.

Bob Montgomery, Norman Strebe, local gunsmith, and Edward Davis, congenial proprietor of the Anacostia Sport Mart, went fishing. An early start put the trio on the Southwest Middles in search of cobia.

A fruitless effort which consumed the entire morning was abandoned and the search for bluefish was on. The latter idea was almost as bad as the "cobia" effort.

The sun was slowly sinking when the anglers decided to chum. As a last resort a chum line was started and it reached a half mile before the first blue put in an appearance.

Almost at once the water for a mile was churning with bluefish. In an hour and a half the trio landed 70 blues that averaged 2 pounds each.

All in all, it looks like our best bluefish run in recent years.

Hamlet Without Makeup

Bromwich Excels At Tennis, Theatrics

By Red Smith

New York, Aug. 27 (NYHT).—In the marquee of the West Side Tennis Club Stadium at Forest Hills the sign reads with stern repitition, "Quiet Ppease," Quiet Please," "Quiet Please," "Please Refrain from Loud Talking." That last is for the two-syllable readers, and then there is a big polished plank with gilt lettering which declares: If you Can Meet With Triumph and Disaster and Treat Those Two Imposters Just The Same . . ."

It is all very sporting, and it must be reported that the consumers minded their manners with the utmost discretion today during an exercise in advanced theatrics presented by Mr. John Bromwich, the Australian thespian, in the doubles match of the Davis Cup challenge round.

Red Smith

Keeping their voices low, the customers rooted fervently for Mr. Bromwich and his partner, Billy Sidwell, as the visitors struggled and scrambled to pump some breath back into Australia's moribund chances of recovering the mug.

After the first two sets, which Gardnar Mulloy and Billy Talbert won with almost embarrassing ease, it became a rousing contest in which Bromwich demonstrated again and again why he has been regarded as the world's best doubles player.

BUT AT NO TIME were the shots as exciting as this ambidextrous invader's histrionics.

Sidwell and Frank Sedgeman had lost their singles matches on Friday to Ted Schroeder and Pancho Gonzales, so an American victory in the doubles would eliminate all doubt about the United States retaining the shiny silver gaboon which it brought home from Australia in 1946.

And when the match started it seemed ridiculous that there could have been any doubts. Mulloy and Talbert, four-time National doubles champions—although they were beaten this year—made it look drearily simple.

They broke Bromwich's first service and then coasted, 6—3, marching through with steady caution, content to preserve their advantage. They did the same in the second set, again breaking Bromwich's first service and driving through, 6—4.

Bromwich had been playing badly. With everyone expecting the Americans to win out in straight sets, it had all the makings of a horror spectacle. And Mr. Boris Karloff, an old hand at such productions, was seen to pale slightly in his marquee chair.

THERE SEEMED no question whatever about the result. Indeed, the only argument heard was a debate on whether Mr. Karloff should give Mr. Bromwich lessons as a tragedian, or vice versa.

The performer from Sydney was positively Shakespearean. As a matter of fact, he could easily play Hamlet without make-up, with his sharp, jutting profile, his long, lank yellow hair, and his air of breeding melancholy.

He plays with his teeth clenched and his lean features twisted in a grimace of speechless agony. Like a man with a knife in his vitals. Every point scored brought a response.

He would fling his head back and gaze aloft in supplication. He would fling his racquet away or pound it upon the turf. His chest heaved. His eyes rolled. His shoulders lifted and sagged. His neck drooped.

Despair rode his bowed head. He seemed to feel that every point he scored against Australia was a month out of his life, and his appearance actually did age as the match went on. You would have picked him as the senior of all the players, although he is only 30, four years younger than Mulloy.

AND HE KEPT getting better. From the second set on, he showed the marvelously adroit game that is characteristic of him. Making unbelievable saves, controlling the plays with tactics calculated to divide and conquer the opposition, he guided his younger partner to victory in the next two sets, 11—9, 9—7. In the 20-game third set, whenever Australia had set point and failed to make it, it was Sidwell who erred.

Talbert was bushed from the second set on. Bromwich seemed dying. And by the fifth set, the public manners were tattered. For the first time in the match, Sidwell's service was broken in the fifth game, but Australia broke Mulloy in the eighth. In the twelfth game Australia had match point but Mulloy served an ace. Vulgarians set up such a hooting and howling, protesting that it was a fault, that the umpire, horrified, had to scold them into silence.

In the sixteenth game, Sidwell slammed over a placement and Australia had it, 9—7. Sidwell and Bromwich ran to the net, their hands clasped. Out from the sideline rushed their manager, Clifford Sproule.

On the cheek of each here he planted a large, moist kiss.

Hits One in 9th to Tie, 10th to Win

Boston, Aug. 27 (AP).—Braves' Outfielder Jeff Heath never hit two more timely home runs than he did today. His first, in the ninth inning, pulled Boston into a 5-5 tie. His second gave the Tribe a 10-inning 6-5 victory over the Cincinnati Reds.

Jeff went to bat as a pinch hitter in the ninth and drilled Ewell Blackwell's fi.. offering into the bleachers in right field.

With two out in the tenth, Heath poled one into the same bleachers for the decision.

The victory was the Tribe's ninth in 12 games of this current home st..nd.

Two other Boston runs were scored on homers. Elbie Fletcher poled his tenth since he was rescued from the minors and Connie Ryan rapped his first of the season.

Bob Elliott stroked a pinch-hit double in the seventh for Boston's third and fourth runs of the game.

The Reds chased Johnny Sain for the fourth time this season. They scored all their runs against him in the first seven innings.

Sibby Sisti played short for the Braves today, replacing Al Dark who injured his foot last night while beating out a hit. Dark will be out of action indefinitely. He went home to Lake Charles, La., where his second child is expected within a few days.

Kiner Belts 37th, Bucs Win

Philadelphia, Aug. 27 (AP).—Capitalizing on five errors and Ralph Kiner's thirty-seventh homer of the season, the Pittsburgh Pirates walloped the Philadelphia Phillies, 8-2, today in the final of a four-game series.

It was Kiner's eighth four-bagger in the last 14 games. In 1947, when Ralph belted 51 homers, he made his thirty-seventh on August 23. Last year, with a total of 40 homers, he didn't crash this thirty-seventh out of the park until September 5.

The Phils grabbed the lead in the second inning when Willie Jones belted a round-tripper. But that was as far as they got.

Pittsburgh took advantage of three Phil errors in the fourth to score five runs and take a 5-1 lead.

CHAMPION LOOKS FIT—Manuel Ortiz, world bantamweight champion who fights Jimmy Cooper at Griffith Stadium tomorrow night, looks ready to go the full distance, 10 rounds, if necessary, in an overweight fight

Champ to Scale 124

Ortiz Will Outweigh Cooper For Monday's Non-Title Bout

Bantamweight Champ Manuel Ortiz, who refused to fight Jimmy Cooper unless the local lad agreed to make 122 pounds, yesterday said Cooper could weigh whatever he wished for Monday's nontitle bout at Griffith Stadium.

The reason? Ortiz will eigh about 124, some 6 pounds more than the bantam limit and 4 pounds more than the colorful Mexican usually scales for his non-championship bouts.

Originally, Cooper agreed to scale 122, give or take a pound, and Ortiz the same. Abiding by the agreement, the 21-year-old Cooper has been in training for six weeks for the most important fight of his youthful career and will weigh less than Ortiz when the two square off Monday.

Ortiz, 32, on the other hand, only recently started exercising for the match and discovered he can't make the agreed weight stipulation. "I could," he said yesterday, "but it would take too much out of me."

Billy Banks, Cooper's manager, agreed to forget the weigh-in stipulations under one condition—that Ortiz give Cooper a crack at the title if the local boy wins Monday.

To this Johnny Rogers, Ortiz' man, agreed.

Both fighters wound up preparations for the scuffle yesterday in drills at Turner's Arena. Cooper banged three sparring partners around while Ortiz boxed and skipped rope for six rounds.

Tickets Available At Turner's Today

The ticket office at Turner's Arena will remain open all day today to sell fight tickets. Tomorrow all tickets will be sold at Griffith Stadium with Turner's being closed.

Cycle Ace TakesLead in Boat Race

By Happy Walker

Baltimore, Md., Aug. 27.—Dough Creech, Cahrlotte (N. C.) motorcycle dealer, staged a one-man invasion of the Maryland Yacht Club here today in the first of a two-day speed spectacle.

Creech, who has only been racing three years, already has the 1948 Class C Hydroplane high point trophy for outboards under his belt and is well on his way to a repeat.

With the exception of the second heat for B Hydros in which he developed motor trouble getting a late start and the first heat of the F. Hydro, Creech took six firsts and one second, for a total of 2700 points.

The Carolinian only missed a perfect score by one second place in which outboard veteran Emil Mayer, jr., College Point, Long Island, eked out a hotly contested first place in Class F. At that, Mayer was awarded high point for the class by a narrow margin of 2/5 second over Creech.

D. C. Pilot Third

Washington's racing contingent of Hudson Moses, Ike Hale, Dean Wooster, Maizie Roger, Jimmy Baden and Dick Bower proved they could go to a regatta and take it or leave it. In this case they left it.

All was not in vain, however. It remained for Washington's newest outboard driver, Dick Bower, to manage a third place in both heats of the B Hydro for 450 points, with his Let's Go.

Hale, usually in the top stop at regattas, did not go home empty handed either. He cashed in with one third, the C Hydros and two fourths in the F Hydros. This gave his boat Senator a total of 638 points.

In an added twilight feature event, Jack Marr of Falls Church, Va., and Wes Lusby of Washington shared second and fourth spots in a 5-mile race for family outboard runabouts 22 horsepower and under.

Tomorrow's crowded schedule will be highlighted by the appearance of gold cuppers Guy Lombardo, Harry Lynn, George Sarant and Clarence Clark.

D. C. Dentist Wins Thistle Laurels

Baltimore, Aug. 27 (AP).— Although he didn't win a single race, Dr. Walter Lawson of the Columbia Yacht Club, Washington, D. C., was able to accumulate enough points to capture the National Thistle championship today at Middle River.

The Washington dentist, whose crew consisted of his wife and Arthur Carnduff of Washington, finished fifth in today's final race. He had previously had two fourths and a third to his credit for a total of 126 points.

Jersey Skipper Dinghy Winner

Annapolis, Md., Aug. 27 (AP).—Ruyon Colie, jr., of Mantoloking, N. J., today won the Penguin Dinghy class national yachting championship for the third time in a row.

Colie, with Mary Elizabeth Pilling as crew, sailed Outsider to victory over 26 other penguin combinations in the five-race series. He scored three firsts, a second and a third to take the title.

Otulp, sailed by Joe and Alice Kraft of Alexandria, Va., was second in the series standings with two firsts, a second, a fifth and a seventh.

Third place in the title competition went to Jack and Ray Reckford of Baltimore in Scanty. Len and Dorothy Penso of Washington, D. C., finished fourth in Trinket. Charles Boykin and Jimmy Kosicki of Hampton, Va., took fifth with Little Bird.

Colesville Can Win County Title Today

The Montgomery County Baseball League feature today will find Colesville entertaining Damascus at Bonifant's Meadow, while Bethesda plays host to Rockville, and Silver Spring journeys to Sandy Spring.

A victory for Colesville will clinch their claim to the loop title. All games start at 3 p. m.

$2 Bills Disappearing From Race Tracks

By Walter Haight
Post Reporter

SUPERSTITION has just about dealt the $2 bill a knockout blow. Frowned on in many quarters as hard luck, the deuce long was accepted without comment as useful currency at the race tracks. However, time changes many things and the $2 note now is getting the go-by at the turf centers. I'm told that in California race fans won't accept one at the pay-off window, demanding bills of other denominations. Maryland followers also are developing an allergy to deuces. At the Bel Air meeting, Mutuel Manager Walter McConnell started the session with $25,000 worth of $2 bills and most fans, who received them in change or pay-off, put them right back into the plant at the first opportunity . . . reminds me, I once cashed a sizeable bet on the last race at Laurel. Busy at the typewriter, I asked a friend to cash it for me. The cashier paid him with all $2 bills, the stack being several inches thick. When my friend returned, he tossed the bankroll into the air and the bills came down all over me as he remarked. "Look! They paid you off in garbage." . . . just as radio broadcasts of baseball and football here made many new fans for the Nats anad Redskins, television has developed thousands of wrestling enthusiasts. I believe half of the gals over 50 who see video secretly are in love with Mr. America. I hear women, who have never seen a live match, discuss the various holds with the authority of experts . . . John Maragon has come a long way since the days when he held the East Potomac golf course championship for slicing his drives . . . with the Maryland trotting season concluded at Ocean City, seaside resort merchants are divided as to whether or not business in general was helped. The majority are reported beefing.

Haight

THE NEW GRANDSTAND AT MARLBORO is well appointed in every detail except one—the pressbox. The coop for scribes looks like a Chic Sales and track officials admit it is temporary. Seems to be a habit for race track builders to forget to include a pressbox in their plans. Hialeah, Tropical Park, Atlantic City and other plants were erected without remembering press accommodations. Atlantic City solved the problem by abandoning plans for a Turf Club and turned the air-cooled quarters on the top of the stands into a pressbox. The others have blocked off sections of grandstand seats for the writers . . . Wheeling Downs is the only race track to my knowledge enjoying a higher mutuel play than 1948 . . . Eddie Smith, Washington boy and former jockey, was a visitor at Bel Air last week. Eddie gained national acclaim when, as an outrider at the Detroit track, he grabbed a jockey off a runaway horse . . . Laurel, opening September 24, has revamped its betting ring, despite the downward trend in wagering . . . several columns ago I wrote about the hardheads staying in the bay long after they were supposed to have left. I see by Friend Ralph Murdock's spicy wordage that the popular fish are making a current comeback . . . if that proposed sports stadium is built out by the National Guard Armory it will take away the last undeveloped ground in the District large enough for a mile race track.

A WELL-KNOWN OWNER TRAINER recently appeared at the track wearing a white shirt with a large portrait of a racehorse on the back. That's one way of keeping in front of the horses, if you know what I mean . . . Several of my fight-wise friends agree with me that Joe Louis will attempt a comeback when the outdoor season opens next Spring . . . when asked to describe the Kentucky Derby, the late Irvin S. Cobb replied, "if I could do that I'd have a larynx of spun silver and the tongue of an annointed angel." . . . if the present Nat pitchers are discouraged because they are hurling winning ball and still lose games, they should remember that Walter Johnson kept throwing just the same. With a better team behind him when in his prime, the Big Train would have won 40 games a season . . . boys of Italian descent outnumber all others in the jockey profession in this country, topped, of course, by Eddie Arcaro . . . isn't it ducky the way Bill (NBC) Stern puts his sports show to music and works himself into a lather? . . . last week Color Cerrado won at Bel Air and paid $223.40. Ever since, I've been hearing about sensational bets made on the 110-to-1 shot. Almost everybody around the track seemed to have a ticket. Truth is that only $198 was wagered on the nag. A lot of people must have been dreaming.

Cards Beat Giants Twice

Solly Hemus kept the Giants off base.

Bill Rigney shattered Brecheen's bid for a no-hitter with a clean single to left with two down in the seventh. The Giants put three singles together for a run in the eighth and added another in the ninth on Rigney's home run.

Aussies Win In Doubles

after two sets and yet came back to claim a victory.

Talbert and Mulloy swept through the first set in 20 minutes. Both Aussies were playing such miserably poor tennis that the Americans didn't win a single earned point, outside of three service aces, until the seventh game.

The second set merely offered more of the same. The Americans broke Bromwich's serve again and blazed their own deliveries across to win. It was a cinch. In the two sets, the Americans made only six outs, an amazing performance. Browich looked so bad even the most ardent American fans felt sorry for him.

Then, in the third set, something happened. Talbert and Mulloy appeared to grow careless, or overconfident, and began making errors. The two Aussies, with Sidwell doing acrobatics at the net and Bromwich getting the range with his soft, tricky angled shots just over the net, began playing much better tennis.

Play followed service in the third until the eighteenth game, when Mulloy failed to hold service for the first time. Both he and Talbert looked tired as they left the court for a 10-minute rest, but it was felt they still had a safe advantage over the challengers.

But in the fourth set, the two Australians again stubbornly refused to lose service, and in the sixteenth game Mulloy again lapsed on his delivery, and the match suddenly was all square.

The final was a real thriller. With the count 2-2 in games, Sidwell finally bowed to heavy pressure by the two Americans and dropped his serve for the first time. Leading 4-2, Talbert and Mulloy appeared to be on safe ground. But again Mulloy was beaten back on his service in the eighth game, and it was anybody's match.

In the twelfth game the Aussies reached match point against Mulloy's service, but he saved it with what the line man called an ace. The crowd booed the decision lustily, having decided by that time that it wanted the visitors to win.

Four games later it got its wish. The stadium was in an uproar as the Americans fought off three straight match points. Then, after a typically furious exchange at the net, Sidwell saw an opening down Talbert's alley and threaded it with a clean winner. .

Tigers Win 6th Straight

second two-base hit of the afternoon.

Catcher Aaron Robinson opened the fifth with a double, went to third on Don Kolloway's infield hit and then both runners scored on Berry's shot to left. Newhouser walked, Lake bunted and Berry came in on a fly ball to make it 5-2.

The Nats zipped back in the sixth with two of their own. Sam Mele and Clyde Vollmer led off with the fifth and sixth hits off Newhouser before Robinson hit into a double play to put Mele on third with two outs.

Kozar's hopper went through George Kell for an error, scoring Mele, before Christman lined a double to right center scoring Kozar to make the score 5-4. Starter Joe Haynes was lifted for Pinch Hitter Roberto Ortiz, who popped up, so Gonzales came on the scene in the Tiger half.

Hoot Evers singled and then scored ahead of Aaron Robinson when the big Detroit catcher slammed out his twelfth home run of the year to run the count to 7-4.

But the Nats still weren't through. Eddie Robinson walked with one away in the eighth and was replaced by Eddie Yost, who went to third on Kozar's single and scored on another by Christman. That blew Newhouser right out of the game and Hutchinson took over for the Tigers.

Gil Coan batted for Evans and walked to load the bases, still with only one out. Buddy Lewis was called on to hit for the pitcher and rammed one back to Hutchinson who wheeled and fired the ball to second to start a rally-throttling double play that broke Senator backs.

Mickey Harris took over in the Tiger eighth and held the line and then the Nats made their final futile bid. Sam Dente was spiked above the right knee in the eighth so Robertson came into the game. He led off in the ninth and poled out his home run. Mele singled after one out, but Hutchinson retired the last two batters with the aid of a long running catch by Evers on a liner by Vollmer.

Collegian Assails Channel Swimmers As 'Dog- Paddlers'

Columbia, Mo., Aug. 27 (U.P.).—Bill Kirkham, University of Missouri student, incensed by the publicity given to what he calls "those channel dog-paddlers," issued a challenge today to all comers for a speed race across the English Channel.

Kirkham, who spent a good deal of his service career clearing underwater obstacles for Army beachhead operations, claimed that the recent Channel swimmers were just out "on a pleasant excursion, accompanied as they were by small power boats, and unpressed as they were for time."

Hornets A. C. Expanding, Needs Help

Out of the daily mail—

The Hornets Athletic Club was organized July 24, in the rear of 1310 Maryland ave. ne., under the supervision of Robert Martin.

Every boy present paid 10 cents in dues and everyone seemed to think that at last there would be some sort of club for the boys of the northeast section, where there is no boys' club.

During following weeks, the boys were so interested in the club that at every practice for the baseball team there was a big turnout. Later, due to large attendance, the club moved to headquarters at 1222 G st. ne.

The purposes of the club are: 1—to prevent juvenile delinquency; 2—to provide wholesome recreation; 3—to help create proper social standards; 4—to train to become worthwhile citizens; 5—to mold desirable traits of character.

This club now has growing pains. It needs equipment, new or old, for baseball, basketball, football, or any other game that kids play. It will be gratefully received at club headquarters.

Soccer Loop Elects

Eric Langford has been elected president of the Washington Suburban Soccer League, Louis Gernand elected vice president, and Robert MacFarland, secretary-treasurer. The league, with 12 teams entered, wants more entries. Anyone interested should call Germand at Johnson 2-0382.

One of the league teams, Uncle Billie's, is in need of players. His team will hold a meeting and a workout Sunday morning at 10:30 at 7100 Walker Mill rd.

Trinidad Plans Drive

Trinidad Boys Club will launch its 1950 adult membership drive September 1.

The goal is $25,000, an amount estimated necessary to expand its activities. Equipment is needed.

The club took root in a ramshackle garage. It now has grown to the point where it sponsors in addition to 51 football teams, baseball, basketball, volleyball, and boxing.

Club director is Fred Nalley, jr., and the board of directors is composed mainly of members' parents.

Marksmen

Nationally known marksmen are expected to compete in the American Trapshooting Association tournament September 11 in conjunction with the opening of the 40,000 range facilities at Berwyn Rod and Gun Club at Muirkirk, Md.

Leading area entrant is Tiny Hill, D. C. champion.

A doubles match will highlight the program. Also scheduled are muzzle loading rifle matches for flintlocks and Kentucky long rifles, an archery contest, horseshoe pitching, a State and county pistol police team match, and a rifle tournament for members of the Maryland Rifle League.

Have Outgrown County

The Ballston Indians of Arlington, which started out after mid-season last summer—with a street team poorly equipped and in T shirts, have outgrown the county.

The first Indian team, a 10 to 15-year-old group, all but a few playing on their first team, lost 14 of their first 16 games, largely because they had no field to practice on. Their last 20 games (they averaged over 4 games weekly in independent play all over the Washington area) were a different story—they won 17 of 20 to wind up with a 19-17 record.

Today, there are three top-notch Ballston Indian nines—a midget team, a 17-and-under group, and until a week ago a 19-and-under team—now unlimited. The unlimited team consists of three players over 19 years of age, who have replaced boys who are making college arrangements.

Ky Colonel, Johns Joy Run 2d, 3d

By Charles Dunkley

Chicago, Aug. 27 (AP).—Calumet Farm's Ponder today ran the fastest mile and a quarter ever raced by a 3-year-old steed to win the $88,450 American Derby at Washington Park and establish himself as the champion of the year in his class.

Ponder, under the guidance of Jockey Steve Brooks, sizzled the distance in 2:00 2-5. That clipped a fifth of a second off the track and Derby record of 2:00 3-5 set by Calumet's Fervent in winning the same event in 1947. Ponder carried 126 pounds compared to 118 assigned to Fervent.

Ponder led Joseph A. Goodwin's Ky Colonel across the finish by two and one quarter lengths. John A. Kinard's Johns Joy was third another length behind, and David Straus and Howard Wells' Mr. Smug fourth. Hal Price Headley's Shakeme was last in the five-horse field. Ponder's running mate, De Luxe, was scratched.

Prize of $66,150

Warren Wright, owner of the Calumet forces, hauled down $66,150 as first prize.

Ponder went to the post the favorite at odds of 6-10 and paid $2.60 and $2.20. Kentucky Colonel returned $2.20 to place. There was no show betting.

The triumph was Ponder's seventh in 17 starts this year and went on the record with three other stakes events which placed him at the top of his division—the Kentucky Derby, the Arlington Classic, and the Peter Pan Handicap.

It raised his earnings for two years of racing to $267,925, all but $400 of which he piled up this year.

Ponder's victory was the fourth American Derby for the Warren Wright establishment. The other Calumet Farm winners were Citation last year, Fervent the year before, and Whirlaway in 1941.

The $66,150 purse also increased Calumet Farm's earnings for the year to $922,647.

The race was witnessed by 21,127.

Ponder's time was three-fifths of a second slower than the world record held jointly at 1:59 4-5 by another stablemate, Coaltown, and St. Andrews II and Shannon II.

Brooks Uses the Whip

Even though Ponder's margin of victory was convincing, Brooks had to lay the whip on the son of Pensive in the drive to the wire after he had taken the lead in front of the grandstand. Jess Higley had Ky Colonel moving fast on the rail and Johns Joy was showing late speed.

Johns Joy snatched the early lead, but Ky Colonel soon took over and was three lengths in front of Johns Joy at the half mile marker. Shakeme was third and Ponder fourth, 10 lengths in back of the leader.

At the mile Johns Joy went to the front by a head and Ponder was within another head of Ky Colonel. They rounded the turn for home in that order and Ponder was on the outside improving his position with every stride.

IN RECORD TIME—Ponder crosses finish line to win yesterday's $88,450 American Derby at Washington Park, Chicago, running the fastest mile and a quarter ever run by a 3-year-old. His time was 2:00 2/5. Ky Colonel was second and Johns Joy third

Helen Sigel Wins Western Golf

Miss Kirk Loses Match On 38th Hole

Chicago, Aug. 27 (AP).—Helen Sigel, 29-year-old Philadelphia champion, beat down a terrific closing rally by Peg Kirk of Findlay, Ohio, to win the women's western amateur golf crown today 1-up in 38 holes.

Miss Kirk was never up in the entire match while Miss Sigel, competing in the tournament for the first time, was three-up after the morning 18. She held this margin through the 33rd hole. Then Miss Kirk perked up to win three consecutive holes and square the match on the 36th.

They halved the 37th in pars. Miss Sigel, 1948 National runner-up and a close pal of Miss Kirk's, then played an easy one-over-par 5 on the 38th while Peg took two shots from a sand trap and eventually required a 6.

For the sake of photographers, Miss Sigel faked a dead faint on the 38th green then jumped up to hug her chum who failed to capture the title after seven tries.

Her triumph marked the first time in five years an Eastern invader captured the trophy. Another Philadelphian, Dorothy Germain, was the champion in 1943 and 1944.

The medalist jinx still hung over the tournament. The affable, 27-year-old Miss Kirk, who fired a qualifying three-under-par 73 for a Westmoreland course record to take honors from Miss Sigel's 74, was seeking to become the first outright medalist in modern golfing history of the meet to continue on to the crown.

Miss Sigel uncorked a 4-over-par 80 to Miss Kirk's 83 to gain the 3-up edge in the morning round.

The Women's Western Golf Association announced that its 1950 amateur championship will be at Exmoor Country Club in Highland Park, Ill., August 14-19.

The Western Open is listed for Cherry Hills in Denver, Colo., the third week in June.

A FEARFUL 41—Frank Leahy, Notre Dame football coach, was 41 years old yesterday. He reminded reporters that in just four weeks the Irish will take the gridiron against Indiana, "the toughest game on the schedule." Then he added: "The one coming up is always the toughest"

Everybody Has Ladies Day But Nats

By Bill Gold
Post Reporter

LADIES DAYS have been abandoned at Griffith Stadium, but elsewhere in the majors they're more popular than ever.

Calvin Griffith, vice president of the Nats says that the home team has stopped scheduling Ladies Days because "there wasn't enough interest. The women didn't turn out for these special days any more."

In contrast, most other clubs in the two loops are enthusiastic about Ladies' Days. As Earl R. Flora of the Chicago White Sox front office puts it: "The lady fans rapidly become the 'buggiest' type of baseball fanatics."

The Pale Hose wouldn't think of dropping Ladies Day. Despite the club's poor showing, the team draws more than 5000 of the fair sex to each of its 13 special days, and recently had a turnout of almost 15,000 ladies at a night game.

The White Sox report that "it doesn't hurt business to admit the ladies for 25 cents; it helps, because it makes new fans."

BILL VEECK of the Cleveland Indians charges his ladies 35 cents for each Saturday home game, and says that "great crowds" of them flock to the stadium throughout the season. "We consider Ladies Days good, sound policy," says Veeck.

Roy Mack, vice president of the Philadelphia Athletics and son of Manager Connie Mack, was also enthusiastic about Ladies Day. "They're great," said Roy. "We charge 50 cents, of which 30 cents is tax, and invite the ladies and the kids out to every home Saturday game. They not only come, but they bring the men along, and it's good for business. It helps us make new friends."

Even the lowly St. Louis Brownies reserve every Saturday for Ladies Day. The charge in St. Louis is also 50 cents.

Until recently, the Yankees hadn't given much thought to whipping up interest among the gentler sex. But two Saturday Ladies Days were held this season, as an experiment. The first drew 14,000 for a game with the Browns. The second, with the Athletics as the opposition, attracted 23,000 ladies "who, naturally, brought a great number of men with them." Now the front office is wondering how long this has been going on, and is busy planning more Ladies Days.

DETROIT alone in the American League reported no schedule of Ladies Days. The Boston Red Sox declined to give any information.

In the National League, seven clubs are enthusiastic about Ladies Days; the St. Louis Cards didn't schedule any this season, but now suspect that this may have been a mistake, and are considering a change of policy.

The Cubs were one of the first clubs in the majors to set aside a bargain day for the ladies, experimenting with the idea as far back as the early 1920's. They've drawn as many as 30,000 ladies to day games. The result of these years of institutional advertising is a real payoff at the boxoffice.

"We figure that women now represent at least 50 per cent of our paid admissions," reports the Bruin front office.

Back in July, the Cubs filled the park for a Brooklyn game with 17,000 ladies and the remainder paid admissions. Because 10,000 other ladies couldn't get in, the club scheduled a "bonus" Ladies Day to make up for their disappointment. (The Cubs, if you haven't noticed, are in last place.)

THE BRAVES have no specific day of the week set aside for the ladies, but merely "try to schedule as many as we can during the season." Like the Phillies, they charge 50 cents (most of which is tax) and report that "invariably the ladies bring their families along, so that our Saturday crowds are now family days."

The Giants charge only 25 cents, and are conducting a real promotion campaign via newspaper and radio advertising to get the ladies to turn out on Friday afternoons. Crowds have been increasing steadily, and currently run around 10,000 ladies per game.

The Pirates set aside Thursdays for the ladies, and schedule no night games on that day if they can avoid it. Whenever there's a Thursday night game, the club designates another day game as Ladies Day.

Average turnout this year has been 9500 per game, and the Bucs feel that it's good policy to have these special days because of "the tremendous interest" that women have been showing in baseball.

And the Cincinnati Reds, who were among the early birds in scheduling special days for women and "Knot-hole League" boys, agree that the policy still pays off at the boxoffice. Gabe Paul, assistant to General Manager Warren Giles, says the days are "very popular with the ladies, and create a great deal of good will for the club."

Cal Griffith's explanation for the cancellation of local Ladies Days would make it appear that Washington women are a unique breed. They aren't interested in bargains.

ROBINSON—From P. 1-C

and I went 0 for 4. Let me tell you that I was not nervous, he was really putting the heat on and I don't think any one could touch him that day.

Yes, it was a bad day for me, but business picked up shortly after that and I wound up the 1947 season with a batting average of .297.

IN 1948 I wound up the season with an average of .296 and now I am hitting around .360 and feeling a lot more respectable, I can tell you. I might say that I think it is all a matter of luck, this hitting the ball. At least, that's what I think it is. I've been a very lucky boy.

(Big Don Newcombe, Jackie Robinson's Negro teammate on the Dodgers, who is one of the team's top pitchers and roommate of Jackie with Roy Campanella, says that it is definitely not a matter of luck. He says that Jackie has probably the best reflexes of any hitter in baseball today and knows every split second just where the ball is on its flight to the batter's box. Doy explained that the faster a man's reflexes are the slower a ball seems to come in to him when he is batting.

(He says it is purely a question of lightning speed and perfect timing on Robinson's part that has put him in the top batting bracket.)

Right here and now, I want to pay tribute to the Brooklyn fans. They have welcomed me with open arms. Without this wholehearted reception I would have had a hard time.

I remember that I got a big hand the first time I stepped up to the plate in Brooklyn. They even stayed with me in my slumps, something that I considered really wonderful, and I believe this spirit in Brooklyn is one of the main reasons the team is near the top.

I DO not mean to say that it is because they were so nice to me, oh no, but that the Brooklyn fans are generally with their team, rain or shine. Chicago is another city where the fans come out to cheer their players on. The stands are crowded day after day regardless of the standing of the team. I think that baseball is the real top America game because it can be the most democratic.

I'll never forget the day when a few loud-mouthed guys on the other team began to take off on Peewee Reese.

They were joshing him very viciously because he was playing on the team with me and was on the field nearby. Mind you, they were not yelling at me; I suppose they did not have the nerve to do that, but they were calling him some very vile names and every one bounced off of Pewee and hit me like a machine-gun bullet.

Peewee kind of sensed the sort of hopeless, dead feeling in me and came over and stood beside me for a while. He didn't say a word but he looked over at the chaps who were yelling at me through him and just stared. He was standing by me, I could tell you that.

Slowly the jibes died down like when you kill a snake an inch at a time, and then there was nothing but quiet from them. It was wonderful the way this little guy did it. I will never forget it. All the fellows on the Dodger team have worked with me in the same spirit.

Business Outlook

By J. A. Livingston

Trade Down Turn Appears Checked

Fall's here. Labor Day's just a week away. College football coaches look speculatively at what the alumni sent in. Sunflowers are in bloom. And businessmen expectantly pore over incoming orders. Change and hope are in the air. Will autumn bring the customary upturn in production and sales?

Livingston

The early evidence is inconclusive but encouraging. The down trend that began last fall has been checked. And that distinguishes the end of summer 1949 from the end of winter. In February and March the forces of decline were in full swing. No pickup occurred at all. The Federal Reserve Board index of industrial production dropped from a high of 195 in November to 192 in December, 191 in January, 189 in February, 184 in March. By July it was down to 162.

But now, an August upturn in production is in the bag. The steel industry is operating around 84 per cent of capacity as compared with 71 per cent in July. Lumber and paper production also have rebounded from recent lows. Coal production is up a bit. The miners, after all, were on vacation in July. Automobile output has risen to a postwar high. Sentiment has improved too.

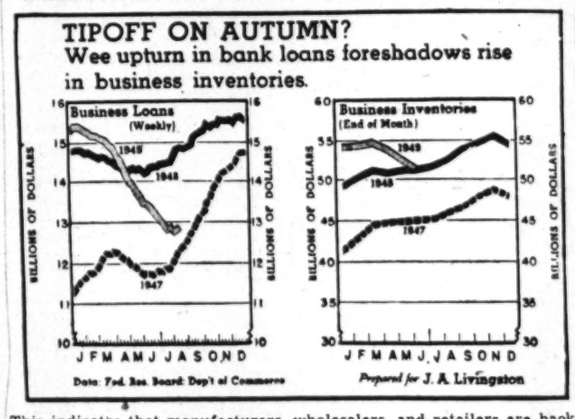
On the Credit Side

These developments can be assembled on the asset side of the business ledger:

1. The stock market, after making a postwar low on June 13, promptly turned around and advanced 11 per cent. Apparently investors and speculators could not resist "bargains." Apparently also they felt that business, profits, and dividends weren't going to pot.

2. Construction has been strong throughout the year. The expected drop in industrial building has been more than offset by Federal, State, and local government public works. Indeed, the value of construction was up 2 per cent in July over a year ago and employment, at 2,149,000 was up 71,000 from June, and off only 70,000 from July. Demand for housing has been surprising. New homes started in July, at 96,000, exceeded July 1948 and were down only 4000 from June. Usually contractors begin cutting down new undertakings at this time. They don't want to run into the cold months.

3. Business loans have increased three out of the last four weeks.



This indicates that manufacturers, wholesalers, and retailers are back in the market for goods. The period of curtailment of inventories is over—at least temporarily.

4. Prices of nonferrous metals, which started rising seven weeks ago, have held firm at their recovery highs. And steel scrap prices continue strong. Reports from steel centers like Pittsburgh, Sparrows Point, Md., Chicago, and Birmingham indicate that orders coming in are only partially in fear of a steel strike. Some steel consumers, apparently, permitted their stocks on hand to run too far down and are now actively replenishing to meet current orders.

5. Sales of worsteds have picked up in Boston and New York markets. Manufacturers of women's suits are looking forward to a "good fall." How much of this is based on hope and how much on real business in hand remains to be seen. Rayon deliveries also are up.

6. Initial claims for unemployment compensation in the week ended August 13 were at the lowest level of the year—an indication of a pickup in employment.

Test Is the Follow-Through

The real question is: Will business be as lively in October and November as it is today? Is the current improvement more than seasonal? Debits still appear on the business ledger. Department store sales in the first two weeks of August ran about 14 per cent under a year ago. Part of this is due to lower prices. Part is due to unusually hot weather. But in the week ended August 20, the decline was only 7 per cent. Housewives were willing to shop when the heat and the humidity let up.

Retail sales as a whole are doing as well as last year, but that is largely because declines in refrigerators, washing machines, clothing, and miscellaneous items have been offset by the continued heavy demand for autos. Once consumers have purchased autos—and paid for them—they'll have funds available for other items, but might not spend them.

How businessmen, themselves, think and act in 1950 is apt to be decisive. Repair and rehabilitation needs of industry have by no means been completed. But corporate profits are down noticeably. Hence executives are apt to be conservative. They don't like to spend until they know where the money's coming from. Railroads, for instance, won't make large capital commitments until they find out just how the 40-hour work week for nonoperating employes will affect their payroll.

Steel Board Holds the Key

The decision of the Steel Fact-Finding Board will be a critical influence on costs, prices, profits, and the inclination of businessmen to expand. If the board were to award a wage increase and the steel companies were to accept, not only would wages rise in steel, but throughout industry. Walter Reuther would demand from Ford at least what Philip Murray got in steel. Ditto John L. Lewis in coal and the United Electrical Workers in the electrical equipment industries.

On the other hand, if the steel companies were to resist the board's findings, that would cause a strike—and again, businessmen would be in suspense. How long would the strike last? What would the ultimate settlement be? If the board were to do what nobody expects and turn down the demand of the union in toto, Murray might refuse (though that seems unlikely). And again there'd be a strike.

For the present, therefore, the Steel Fact-Finders hold the key to capital goods expenditures in 1950. For, when businessmen are trying to get costs under control, anything that raises costs—that upsets calculations—militates against expansion. But anything that tends to stabilize costs contributes toward expansion.

Hume Retires, Competitors To Honor Him

By S. Oliver Goodman

They'll come from far and near to honor William R. Hume, who's retiring after 32 years of service to Woodward & Lothrop.

Hume

More than 175 of his friends, many of them from competing stores, will gather Wednesday night at a dinner in the Statler Hotel to pay tribute to Washington's dean of housewares buyers. Manufacturers and wholesalers throughout the country will be there, also.

'Bill' Hume, said a houseware buyer from a rival store, is the type of person you like to have as a competitor. "He's an all-around grand fellow and gets along with everybody. He likes people and they like him."

Hume, born in Remington, Va., came to Washington in 915. He managed a chain grocery store for the next two years and then joined Woodward's in 1917 as a blanket salesman. A few months later he was elevated to floor manager and in 1919 was appointed an assistant buyer in the house furnishings department. On October 15, 1921, he became a buyer in the same department and that's the position he's leaving.

Hume expects to leave September 10 for Florida where he has bought a home. There, he hopes to use his leisure on his hobbies—woodworking and fishing.

Video Now Ready To Do Duty as Night Watchman

New York, Aug. 27 (AP).—A television night watchman that sees in the dark was put on display here today.

The video night watchman is a special system developed by Capehart-Farnsworth Corp. of Fort Wayne, Ind., and Diamond Power Specialty Corp. of Detroit for commercial and industrial use.

The system is more simplified than that used for broadcast television received in the home, and sends its pictures over a closed wire circuit instead of through the air.

Here's how it sees in the dark: a camera is set up to cover a point to be guarded. The area is illuminated by infra red light that is not visible to the human eye, but which registers on television. To an intruder, the place appears to be in total darkness. But the television camera sees him by the infra red light and transmits a sharp, clear picture to a viewing screen in some central location.

Views Differ On Meaning of Stock Decline

New York, Aug. 27 (AP).—The stock market declined this week for the first time in 10 weeks.

Some claimed the setback marked the end of a summer rally. Others viewed it as a temporary interruption.

In any case an advance that started in mid-June, after the market had plunged to a 4½-year low, was stopped dead in its tracks.

Faint signs of trouble appeared toward the close of the preceding week. Then last Tuesday a three-day decline reached a climax when the market, in a quiet and orderly fashion, took the worst spill since June 13.

Wall Street wasn't too much concerned with what was a comparatively severe drop. The experts saw nothing in particular in the news to account for the relapse, aside from a larger than usual batch of dividend reductions and omissions.

After 9-Week Advance

The market, it was pointed out, had been advancing steadily for some nine weeks. A look at the record showed that a reaction after a sustained rise was to be expected.

On Wednesday, Thursday and Friday the market seemed to have gone into summer hibernation, if there is such a condition. Business fell off, prices barely stirred.

For the financial district it was a period of watchful—and hopeful—waiting. Wall Street watched for a new trend to take shape and hoped, as usual, that it would be upward.

At the weekend, though, at least two factors were at work which tended to brake buying interest.

Steel Situation Watched

Top billing was given to the recommendations which the President's Steel Fact-Finding Board is expected to make. It was widely anticipated in downtown Manhattan that the board would propose some sort of wage boost. What steel makers would do about the recommendation was another question, inasmuch as major companies have been careful to point out that they are not bound—nor is the steel workers' union—by any decision.

A union-industry agreement on a wage increase could have a depressing effect on the market. Not only would steel profits be affected by an increase but many other industries would take a cue on wage policy from steel. As a result a lot of traders adopted a wait-and-see attitude pending a settlement of the steel argument.

A second stumbling block to more active trading was the desire to go slow until decisions, if any, are reached at the forthcoming international conference on Britain's economic condition.

A good part of Wall Street is groping in the dark in any attempt to evaluate the effects of some of the cures, or nostrums, recommended as aids for Britain.

Devaluation of the pound has been suggested time and again—and the suggestion is almost as roundly denounced as it was vigorously proposed. What would be the effect of devaluation? That depended mainly on which expert you talked to. Actually no one could know for sure just what would happen.

About all that the business community could bank on appeared to be a reduction in our exports to Britain.

The skittishness among stock traders over the possibility that the unexpected might upset the market applecart was not merely an occupational disease.

A chance that an unknown factor might jar the entire economy was mentioned by frequently optimistic economist Sumner H. Schlichter, Harvard University professor of economics. Slichter said:

"The business recession is near bottom and the upturn may be expected to start before the end of the year unless there is a development of new and unforeseen depressing influences."

Heating Oil Advances Second Time by ESSO

New York, Aug. 27 (AP).—Esso Standard Oil Co. announced today an increas effective Monday in the price of home heating oil for cargo shipments at the Gulf of Mexico to 7 cents a gallon from 6.5 ents.

This is the second increase y Esso after nine months of gradually declining oil prices. On August 15 it raised Gulf cargo prices to 6.5 cents from 6.3 cents. In the past local distributors usually have passed the increase along to consumers in the Eastern area supplied from the Gulf.

THE WEEK IN REVIEW—The Associated Press average of 60 stocks declined last week for the first time in 10 weeks. It ended the period at 64.1 compared with 64.9 a week previously. Volume was the smallest in more than a month. The Commodity Index showed the largest gain since June 18, 1948, largely as a result of higher prices for livestock, grains and textiles. It closed the week at 155.2 compared with 153.1 a week previously

Auto, Steel Earnings Bolster Six-Month Record of Industry

A survey covering 454 companies with securities listed on the New York Stock Exchange showed yesterday 60 per cent had lower earnings the first six months of this year than in the like 1948 period.

The analysis of the earnings of the 454 companies—of a total of 1,247 whose securities are listed on the exchange—is reported in The Exchange, monthly publication of the New York Stock Exchange.

"The figures," said the publication, "point up a decided change from the earlier post-war years and give a measure of reflection of the business readjustment which got under way last winter."

The Exchange said a table of total earnings of the companies showed "a trifling decline of one per cent" to $2,241,627,000.

"In contrast with the automotive roster's showing of 28.8 per cent rise in net income, the railroad and rail equipment group (containing only a few more companies) showed a decline of 25.2 per cent," the publication continued.

"The 29 steel and iron company exhibit of a 49.2 per cent growth might be compared with the rise of only 1.9 per cent in the 25 corporations of the food products and beverage alignment."

"The petroleum and natural gas grouping of 23 companies revealed a decline of 26.4 per cent, and the 20 retail trade organizations reported a recession of 23.5 per cent," The Exchange said.

"Eleven groups, all told, lost ground and only seven gained; and had it not been for the active status of the automobile and steel categories, the net showing of the complete exhibit would have been much farther on the retreat side than it was."

"The showing," added the publication, "brings no surprise to persons who have followed industrial news from day to day, for the scope of employment, production and demand for motor cars and steel, these being related in no small degree, had forecast the trend long before quarterly and half-yearly earnings estimates were issued."

Chicago Grain

Chicago, Aug. 27 (AP).—Soybeans fell a couple of more cents in an otherwise steady market on the Board of Trade today. At one time beans sank around 5 cents, but there was enough of a recovery in the closing minutes to shave a cent or more from this loss.

Among grains, wheat turned in the best performance. It was higher most of the day on expectations of Government flour buying next week. Corn dipped at the start but recovered quickly to end mixed. Oats did better than corn on firmness in the cash market.

Wheat ended unchanged to 1 cent higher. Corn was ½ lower to ½ higher. Oats were ⅛ to ¾ higher. Rye was ¼ to ⅜ lower. Soybeans were 2¼ to 3 cents lower and lard was 5 to 15 cents a hundred pounds lower.

Soybeans were a little shaky at the start but there was no heavy overnight forced liquidation. Prices advanced above the previous close. But then a renewed flurry of selling developed and prices faded rapidly, settling at new lows for the week. Prices rallied slightly at the close.

Renewed liquidation was touched off by reports buyers were bidding only 3.05 for old-crop soybeans.

According to milling circles, the Production and Marketing Administration sent out bids for flour offers to be made after the market closed Monday. This aided wheat as the PMA has been out of the market for several weeks. It was estimated the Government agency wanted between 400,000 and 500,000 sacks.

Some local selling developed in corn at the start on trade advices the Commodity Credit Corp. would limit its storage bin program to 300 million bushels. Previously 500 million bushels had been mentioned. But the other 200 million bushels may be added next spring, it was said.

Speculation Centers on '50 Auto Models

Detroit, Aug. 27 (AP).—Many 1950 automobiles will come out before this year's end and there is much speculation about their probable appearance.

The speculation results from the drastic changes made by Studebaker and the innovations by Buick in its new series 40 models.

In both instances the major appearance changes were made in the front end. Studebaker gave its various models a startling change by adapting an airplane type hood. It did away entirely with the conventional heavy-barred grilles.

Buick made a noticeable change by placing heavy vertical grille bars forward of the front bumper.

There hasn't been even a hint of what styling changes the other General Motors divisions and Chrysler and Ford will make. The manufacturers always try to keep such things secret until their cars begin to roll from the assembly lines.

Many Changes Expected

But it is a fair assumption that from Cadillacs to Crosleys there will be style changes. They will be broad enough so that nobody will mistake a 1950 for a 1949 model. This can be done without a heavy outlay for retooling. However, the competitive factor is going to be more vital to every car maker in 1950 than most of them expected.

So it is wholly possible several manufacturers will come out with something more than just sheet metal changes. Some will confine their changes to lengthening out fenders and lowering hood covers.

But in the lower priced group like Chevrolet, Ford, Plymouth and Studebaker's Champion model competition should become keener than ever next spring and summer. That easily could lead to more drastic styling changes.

Studebaker's Next Look

Changes in the new Buick 40 series were strictly of the face-lifting variety. Studebaker, however, completely re-designed its bodies and referred to the result as the "next look" in motor cars.

These changes emphasize that the car stylists haven't yet exhausted all the possibilities of design changes. Some industry authorities said a few months ago the appearance of automobiles had been pretty well fixed in the post-war models already introduced. They added that styling generally would remain unchanged for at least two or three more years.

Studebaker already has disproved this.

CIO Declares Bill Imperils 40-Hour Week

By the United Press

The CIO last night called the House-passed 75 cents an hour minimum wage law "a real ripper job" on the Fair Labor Standards Act.

Solomon Barkin, chairman of the CIO committee on revision of the act, said the House bill "waters down" present benefits of the law, and "would permit the wiping out of the 40-hour workweek for all employes."

He said this would be permitted by a "joker" which redefines the hours of work. The provision, Barkin declared, permits "any working time to be excluded from measured working time." Barkin said there are many other changes in wording and definition which would require long litigation to determine their meaning.

"Like the Taft-Hartley Act, it would throw open the question of minimum wage and hour protection into the courts for a 10-year period of litigation before it could be known just what the new act means," Barkin stated.

Secretary of Labor Tobin has criticized the bill similarly.

North Carolina to Sell $50,000,000 of Bonds

Raleigh, N. C., Aug. 27 (AP).—North Carolina will sell 50 million dollars in secondary road bonds here September 28, State Treasurer Brandon Hodges announced yesterday.

It will be the first sale of a series to be made under Governor Scott's 200 million rural roads program.

Hodges said bids on the bonds would be opened in his office at 11 a. m. September 28. It will be the largest bond sale in State history.

Helicopter Builder Reports Good Market

Windsor Locks, Conn., Aug. 27 (AP).—President Charles H. Kaman of the Kaman Aircraft Corp. challenged today a rival's contention that there is no market for helicopters.

Helicopters, Inc., of Stratford announced earlier this week that it had decided to liquidate because the market for helicopters "just isn't there." Kaman asserted that "a commercial market for helicopters does exist and has a tremendous potential."

River Claims Jurisdiction Bill Vetoed

By The Associated Press

The White House yesterday announced presidential veto of a bill to permit a California District Court to decide claims against the Federal Government made by the City of Needles, Calif., and the California-Pacific Utilities Co.

The claims grew out of a rise in the level of the bed and surface of the Colorado River near Needles. Mr. Truman said in his message the apparent purpose of the bill is to waive the six-year period of limitations for the institution of such suits.

The President pointed out that the alleged losses were sustained in 1941.

He said no justification is shown for exempting the two claimants from the law prescribing the period within which the United States may be sued. Mr. Truman noted that other claimants had "found it entirely possible to sue in time."

Mr. Truman also objected to the bill's statement that the losses were caused by "the operation of the Hoover Dam and the Parker Dam."

He said this is inconsistent with the findings of the Court of Claims in a previous case, in which the Cotton Land Co. sued the Government.

Police Reveal Reuther Attack Suspect Search

Detroit, Aug. 27 (U.P.).—Existence of a "definite suspect" in the near-fatal shotgun attacks on Walter and Victor Reuther, officials the CIO United Auto Workers, was revealed today by Police Commissioner Harry Toy.

Toy, spurred by a squabble between him and Victor Reuther over "police laxity" in the investigation, disclosed that a Nation-wide man hunt was under way for the suspect.

"We had an agreement to keep this whole thing a secret until we got a line on him," Toy said. "Victor's statement about him hampers our search."

The commissioner said police have an accurate description of the suspect.

"The description was so good," Toy said, "we will have no trouble identifying the man once we lay our eyes on him."

Toy, criticized by Victor Reuther, UAW education director, said several of the 29 detective teams still assigned to the shotgun attacks were traveling in all parts of the country in search of the assailants.

UNUSUAL OPPORTUNITY

If you are looking for more money and would like to have help to become an established salesman at a good income handling a nationally known electrical unit and associated products we would like to talk to you. First kindly give yourself a rating: 1. Are you willing to put in a substantial amount of time and hard work on an opportunity to earn $500 to $600 a month this year and more in 1950? 2. Are you married or otherwise obligated to earn a good income? 3. Are you really sincere in your ambition to better your scale of living? Everyone wishes he had more. We want men who are going to do something about it. 4. Are you physically able to do a day's work? 5. Do you own a car? 6. Have you had sales experience? 7. Do most of the people you meet seem to like you? 8. Think this one over carefully. Would you just as hard alone in the field on a job you liked as you would in the constant presence of a supervisor? If you can truthfully say yes to most of these questions not necessarily all, and three good citizens will vouch for your honesty and good reputation, you may be our man. At least we should talk it over. Kindly come to 107 N. FAIRFAX ST. in Alexandria, Va., between 10 a. m. and 12 noon. ASK FOR MR. COMPTON.

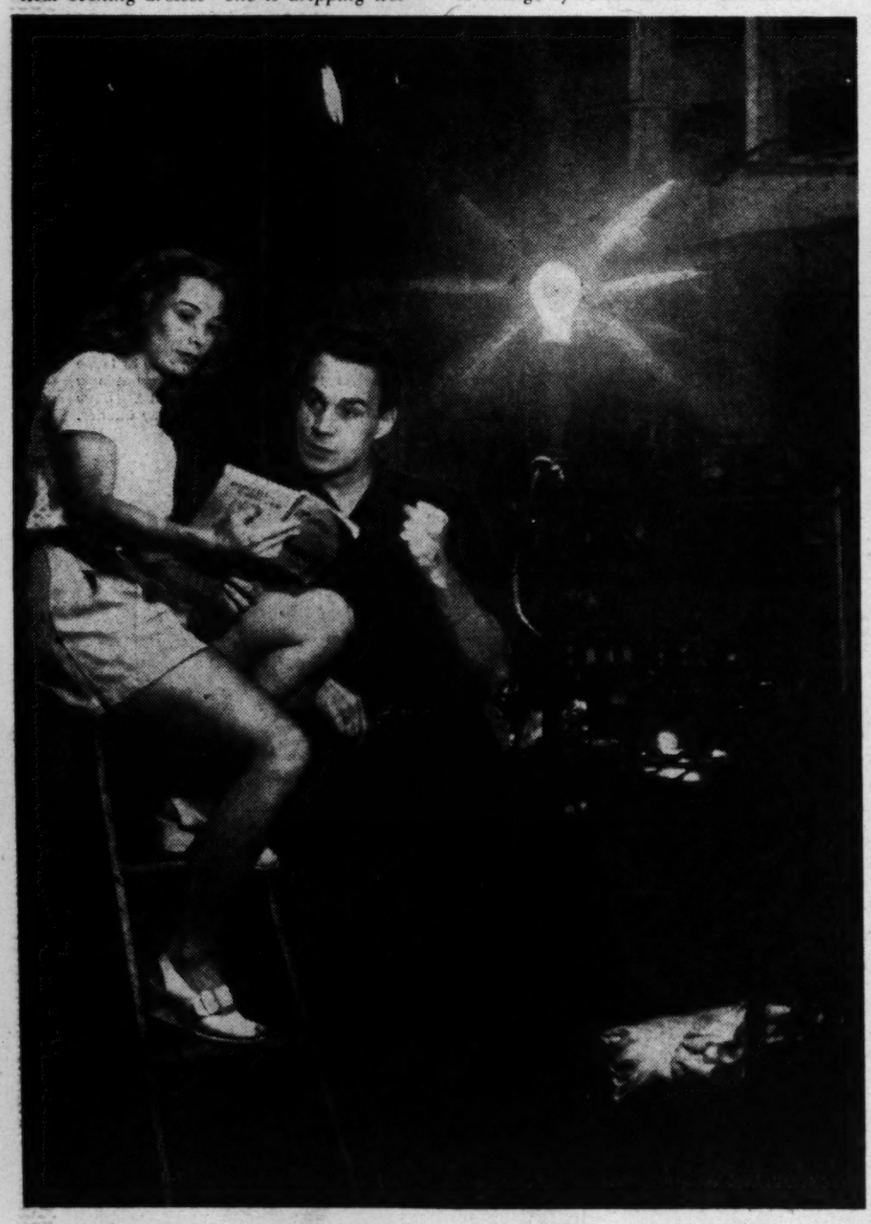
Actors Find It's All Work or No Play at Olney

IT'S A bright summer morning, and June Dayton and her husband, Dean Harens, are going over their script. The picture was taken on the front step at Olney Theater while waiting for rehearsal call. Rehearsal hours are 10 to 1, and 2 to 5

AT 8 o'clock in the evening June Dayton is in her dressing room, putting on make-up. Hanging on hooks are two identical evening dresses—one is dripping wet for the first scene, when she comes in out of the rain, and the other is for the second scene (hours later) pressed and dried. A change of costumes takes one minute



REHEARSING under difficulties. A sound effect of thunder is going on on the right and the lights behind are rather bright. Here Dean Harens and June Dayton learn lines for next week's play just before rehearsing this week's play

Stars Dayton and Harens Shine Around the Clock

By Elizabeth Maguire

A DRIVE to Olney is a popular summer pastime for those who simmer in Washington. Permanent stars at the theater there are June Dayton and her husband, Dean Harens. Pretty and petite, Miss Dayton is still on the young side of 30, and has a bright future. Her versatile husband plays the role of hero one week and cad next with impartial zest.

The theater is located midway between Washington and Baltimore, Out 16th st. on Route 29, it's easy to find, and the breeze is divine. There's a swimming pool for members of the cast and an air-cooling system for the audience. Everybody is happy at Olney.

And everybody at Olney works hard. June Dayton and Dean Harens are up early. Rehearsal call is at 10, and haircuts, laundry, shopping, all odds and ends, come before then.

Rehearsal breaks at 1 for lunch; then from 2 to 5, it's rehearsal again. Between 5 and 8, the cast relaxes, eats dinner and cat naps. By 8 o'clock members are in their dressing rooms putting on make-up. Work usually finishes at 11:30 p. m. It takes an hour or so to wind down, and it's 2 when Olney goes to bed.

Playing and Rehearsing

WHILE playing one part, June Dayton and Dean Harens are rehearsing lines for another play. The past week they have both had parts in "For Love or Money." This evening will be their final performance in that vehicle. Last Wednesday morning they started rehearsing for "Barretts of Wimpole Street," a play which opens at Olney on Tuesday.

Monday night is the most hectic part of the week, as that is dress rehearsal night. Olney Inn down the road is closed, and the audience consists of manager and producer. A staggering list of props is checked—gloves, a pistol, a velvet bag, liquor bottles filled with tea, cups, saucers and the like.

Props are an amusing part of dress rehearsal. A pistol doesn't go off, but someone falls dead anyway. A dog misses his cue and wanders into a love scene. Lights go on and off, and all in all it seems a miracle that the following night is opening night with everything perfection.

A party always follows the performance on opening night. Stars and their guests gather at the inn for a round of toasts and midnight din.

There's sure to be a gala opening with party following on September 27. Sarah Churchill is coming to Olney that evening to play in "The Philadelphia Story." The actress has recently scored great personal success in English movies.

No. 1 Summer Theater

AT OLNEY all scenery is built and painted on the property. Behind scenes an assortment of props includes a piano, a soda fountain, a carriage. A staircase in one play puzzled two little girls in the audience, who came backstage to ask where the stairs went. They were amazed to see a small platform with a second set of stairs going down.

The theater has five sliding stages; the only installation of its kind in the country; and it was recently voted by the Variety as the No. 1 summer theater of the country.

There are four permanent members at Olney—Mr. and Mrs. Harens, Donald Foster and Mary Haynsworth. One week Mr. Harens will star and Mrs. Harens will be in the supporting cast, and next week the situation will be reversed.

They Met on Broadway

JUNE DAYTON started studying for the stage at the age of 7. She has been in the theater for six years. She got her first job immediately and she married her husband just two months after they met. The romance started while they were both playing in "Tenting Tonight" on Broadway.

The ingenue took her name from Dayton, Ohio, where she was born.

Dean Harens comes from South Bend, Ind. He has acted in Hollywood where salaries are agreeable, but he prefers the stage. During a two and a half year contract in Hollywood he worked 18 weeks and received a check for each week of the contract.

THEY MET while playing in "Tenting Tonight" on Broadway, and two months later they were married. Here June Dayton adjusts her husband's tie before curtain call. This week they had parts in "For Love or Money," and starting Tuesday they will be seen in "Barretts of Wimpole Street"

HAVING finished breakfast, Actress June Dayton does the family laundry, a part of her schedule at Olney. At 10 o'clock she will be ready for rehearsal. Off to the right and hidden from the camera's view is a beautiful swimming pool, a more glamorous part of the day's activities

WIG-WAG (center), speaks, coughs and smiles. Sometimes he plays a small role, but he's just as happy on the sidelines. He's off for a stroll now with his friends, Mr. and Mrs. Harens, following luncheon at the inn. On the walk the three will go over the day's script. Wig-Wag really lives several miles up the road, but when summer comes, he hikes over to Olney, and remains there until the season is over at the theater. Leading itinerant stars inherit Wig-Wag on their arrival at Olney. During the past week care was lavished on him by Vickie Cummings, and for the coming week he will be a favorite with Susan Peters

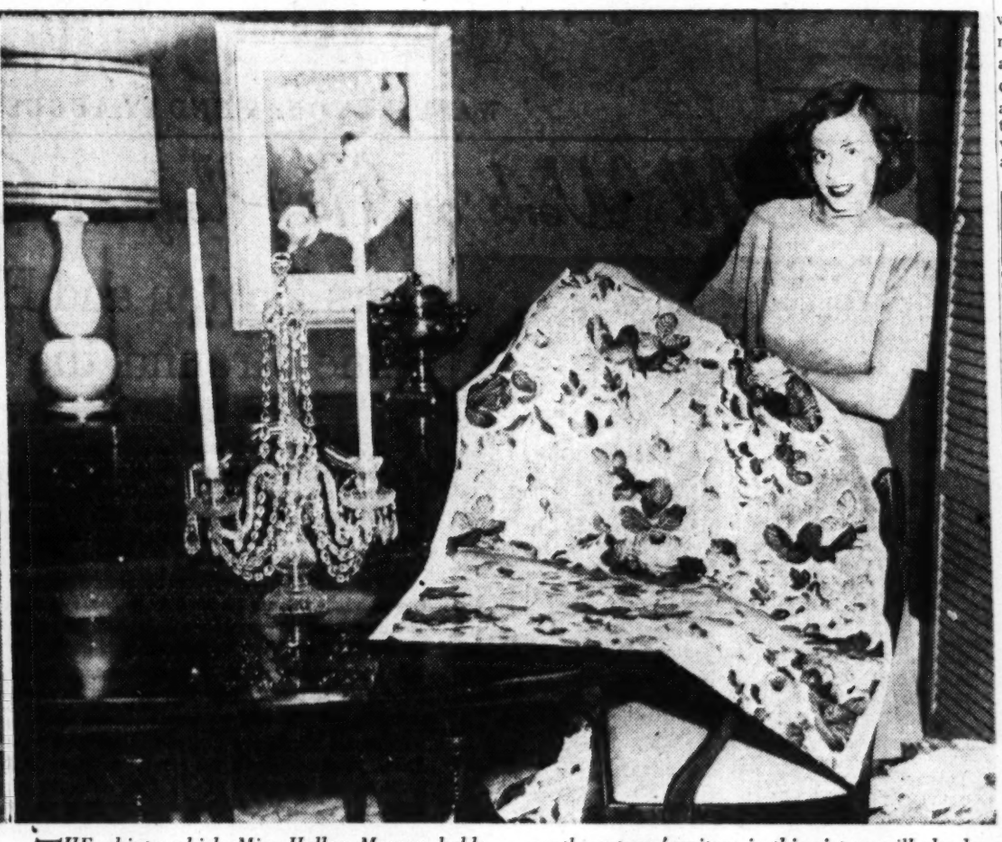
A MAHOGANY table with Duncan Phyfe legs, a shield-backed chair with striped upholstery, and a charming corner cupboard are included in this group of furniture to be used in the traditional dining room of the "Home of '49" in American University Park, built by the D-A Investment Co. and decorated by William E. Miller Furniture Co. Miss Laura Hathaway is pictured here arranging a bowl of roses on the dining room table



THE chintz which Miss Holley Murray holds here will be used to cover one wall of the dining room in the "Home of '49" in Spring Valley. It's a green, aqua and white floral print, and will be applied in the same manner as wallpaper. Eighteenth century furniture in this picture will also be used in the dining room. Miss Murray is assistant home furnishings coordinator for Woodward & Lothrop, which is decorating the house. W. C. and A. N. Miller are the builders

Fewer Open Shelves

Plenty of shelf space is always welcome to the housewife, but many open shelves in the kitchen are rather unwise. They collect dust and grease, attract roaches and mice and prove a temptation to use them as an easy refuge for whatever is at hand, thereby creating a disorderly appearance.

Designed for Gracious Living in 1949

By Lucia Brown

THE DINING ROOM, sometimes called the "forgotten room" in the modern house, will be far from that in the nine furnished "Homes of '49" which open September 11.

There is a trend now toward renewed appreciation of the dining room—its contribution to gracious living, peace, and comfort at mealtime, and family well-being generally. Plans for the model houses in this fall's exhibit, sponsored by The Washington Post, certainly reflect such a trend.

Quiet charm will characterize the one in the Colonial home in American University Park, built by the D-A Investment Co. and furnished by William E. Miller. Eighteenth century furniture—mahogany with a satinwood trim—will be used. It includes a corner cupboard, a Duncan Phyfe table, and shield-backed chairs with striped upholstery. Wallpaper will be in a floral pattern, says decorator J. Harold Gooding, and draperies coral.

EQUALLY soothing will be the atmosphere in the unusual modern dining room of the Malbrook "Home of '49" in Fairfax County. Built by Malice and Brooks, it will be furnished by Malcolm Scates, Inc., with Clifford E. Powell as decorator.

Only a flight of three steps and a long stone planting box filled with tropical plants will divide the dining room from the spacious living room in this big rambler. Green wall-to-wall carpeting will be used in both rooms and all walls will be a soft yellow green. Antique satin draperies will exactly match the walls. "Advance Design" dining furniture, created especially for the Scates firm, includes a large oval table and high-backed chairs upholstered in a green, beige, and chartreuse futuristic print.

ANOTHER house with a rather unique partitioning between living and dining room is the one on East-West Highway built by L. E. Brenuinger and furnished by the P. J. Nee Co. Here a big fireplace and chimney form almost the entire partition between the two rooms. Built-in shelves, which become a china cabinet for the dining room, flank the chimney on one side and the entrance between the two rooms is on the other.

Soft colors will be used in this dining room, too. A gray rug will cover the floor, walls will be chartreuse, and curtains gray textured net. Green upholstery in a modern print will cover the limed-oak chairs. The room will be light and bright, for one wall is almost entirely windows. Thomas Baldwin and Miss Elaine Casteel are the decorators.

These are only a few of the dining rooms planned for the "Homes of '49." There'll be a wide variety of others, both from the standpoint of decor and size.

By Robert Burchette—The Washington Post

LIMED oak is the wood in this modern server. Compact and beautifully proportioned, it will be used instead of a sideboard in the dining room of the model rambler built by L. E. Breuninger and furnished by P. J. Nee out on the East-West Highway. The small server will add to the spacious appearance of the room and a larger piece won't be needed since there is a built-in china cabinet

THERE'S a European trip in the offing for wives of the Appropriations Committee of the Senate, who will tour the 11 Marshall Plan nations this fall. Yes, the ladies can go along this time, but they're making their plans with a when and if attitude about the whole thing—when and if Congress recesses or adjourns.

"Sure, she's going; she goes with me everywhere," said Senator Dennis Chavez, speaking of his wife.

Mrs. Homer Ferguson got the surprise of her life when she found herself on board the Army transport, the General Maurice Rose, on Friday. Looking forward to the ocean trip next month, she and the Senator sailed instead last week and will go to Stockholm for the meeting of the Inter-Parliamentary Union which opens on the 6th. The Senator will be back around September 15. Mrs. Ferguson will stay over for a visit to France and Italy, hoping that her husband will be back again with the Appropriations Committee tour.

If the Senate closes up shop before October 31, Senator John L. McClellan will take Mrs. McClellan on the trip. But he's to make a speech in San Francisco October 31 and if Mrs. McClellan gets that far she is set on getting to Hawaii where her son-in-law and daughter, Capt. and Mrs. F. L. LaFevers, and their two children have been stationed for two years.

MR. ROBERT H. DUNLAP is back from her summer at her ancient chateau in France, plans to be here only a few days before going up to Newport and New England for the remainder of the season.

Mrs. Dunlap keeps open house for her wandering friends abroad. Among her series of visitors were Mrs. Eleanor de Bekessy, who came down from Paris; and Bruce Howe, son of the Walter Bruce Howes of Washington.

ADELINA COPELLO—Addie to her friends—has chosen November 5 as the date of her wedding to Major Jerre Boggs, USAF. Meanwhile she's with her mother and two younger sisters, Ileana and Margarita, who are having a whirl in West Indies resorts. The pair are of debutante age and will probably be presented to society in Washington this winter.

GREETINGS FROM VACATIONERS: A card from Burks and Helen Summers, at Keswick Lodge, Nova Scotia, where the fishing is good; and a note from Nan Garcia on a 38-day South American cruise down the east coast with stops at Buenos Aires and Rio.

THE regatta queen sails the Potomac in the presidential yacht, Williamsburg. Miss Jane Lingo, daughter of Commander and Mrs. B. Harrison Lingo, has been named President's Cup regatta queen and will be crowned at a ceremony at the Watergate on September 7. With her (left to right) are Capt. James G. Shanahan, USA.; Capt. Jack D. Johnson, USAF, and Commander Jesse B. Gay, jr., USN, executive officer of the Williamsburg

Mrs. John Kerr Is Candidate For DAR Post

A District resident—Mrs. John Morrison Kerr will be a 1950 candidate for treasurer general of the National Society, Daughters of the American Revolution. She will run on the ticket of Mrs. James B. Patton of Columbus, Ohio, an announced independent candidate for president general.

When Mrs. Patton announced her candidacy for the office of president general last May, she had no running mates. Recently she decided to form a ticket with associate candidates competing for various other cabinet positions. To date Mrs. Kerr's intention to run is the only official announcement from Patton headquarters.

Mrs. Edwin Stanton Lammers of Dallas, Tex., is the opposing candidate for president general, and Mrs. E. V. Holcombe of Charleston, W. Va., will oppose Mrs. Kerr for the office of treasurer general.

A former national president of the Children of the American Revolution, Mrs. Kerr also has been active in the D.A.R. for 32 years.

In the national society Mrs. Kerr served as a page for nine years, vice chairman of the buildings and ground committee, vice chairman of the American Red Cross Committee.

To Be Crowned September 7

Jane Lingo to Reign As Queen of Regatta

MISS JANE LINGO, daughter of Commander and Mrs. Harrison Lingo, will be this year's regatta queen. The President's Cup Regatta will celebrate the coronation of its nineteenth queen on Wednesday, September 7 at 8:30 with appropriate ceremonies at the Watergate, according to Thomas P. Morgan, jr., chairman of special events.

The pageant surrounding the crowning of the queen will again be provided by Ethyl Manning. Mrs. Ruth Parker Dove, chairman of entertainment, has as cochairman Paul Murphy, chief of special events of Pan American Union, and Lieut. Col. George S. Howard, conductor of United States Air Force Band. Colonel Howard will be heard in an hour concert preceding the crowing of the queen.

September 7 is also Brazilian Independence Day and Colonel Howard and Mr. Murphy have developed a program of spirited Brazilian music in compliment to the occasion. Mrs. Dove is bringing in from New York the talented young artist Kay Armand, featured singer on the radio show "Stop The Music." Another feature will be Evelyn Tyner who will play a concerto with accompaniment by Colonel Howard's Air Force Band. Barnee of Barnee-Lowe Orchestra fame will act as master of ceremonies for the entire show.

National Court

Miss Lingo has a Court selected from the national scene, many of whom will converge on the Capital just in time for the crowning. Miss Dorothy Lane, daughter of the Governor of Maryland and Mrs. William Preston Lane, will fly in from California; Miss Harriet Johnson, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Eric Johnson, will arrive from Washington State. Miss Sophie Mayer, niece of the Ambassador of France and Mme. Bonnet, will cut short a vacation in the Adirondacks to join the court, while from Bryn Mawr will come Miss Polly Wallworth, debutante daughter of Mr. and Mrs. C. Gilbert Wallworth of Philadelphia and Bryn Mawr.

The bevy of local beauties includes Miss Jean Boyle, Miss Julia Bruce, Miss Evelyn Dillard of Alexandria, Miss Bessie Jane McKee, Miss Nancy Misson, Miss Patricia Morgan and Miss Ramona North. Blonde Clay Keene Bernard will be the Princess-in-Waiting to the Queen.

Commander As Escort

Commander Jesse B. Gay of the presidential yacht, Williamsburg, will act as escort for the queen. Other aids from the Williamsburg are Lieut. Albert P. Carpenter, USN, and Lieut. Dennis Moore, USN. Also Lieut. Comdr. Robert W. Hayler, jr., USN; Lieut. Comdr. William H. Hudgins, USN; Lieut. Fred J. Archibald, USA; Capt. James G. Shanahan, USA; Capt. James Sullivan, USA; Capt. Jack D. Johnson, USAF; Capt. Robert S. Rivers, USAF, and Lieut. Norbert E. Linhof, USAF.

Mrs. Max Truitt and Mrs. Charles Brannan head a distinguished patroness list which includes the mothers of four former queens, Mrs. John W. Snyder, Mrs. Julius Krug, Mrs. Clark Clifford and Mrs. Clinton Anderson.

Capt. Heintzelman Weds Miss Stevens

Miss Leila Stevens, daughter of Mrs. Edna Stevens of Springfield, Mass., was married August 20 at West Point to Capt. Harry Heintzelman 3d. A graduate of West Point, Captain Heintzelman served as White House aide from 1945-48 while stationed at Bolling Field.

Congressional Capers

By Genevieve Reynolds

HANDSOME ELIZABETH KEE, wife of the chairman of the House Foreign Affairs Committee, declares that a successful congressional secretary must be a combination of "clergyman, lawyer, psychiatrist and family friend."

Mrs. Kee should know, for she has served as her husband's administrative assistant, secretary and campaign assistant since 1935.

A knowledge of law is needed to untangle many legal posers put by constituents. And if spiritually or mentally troubled, the constituent is looking for ministerial or psychiatric advice. When it comes to helping a man or woman with romantic inclinations, the family friend understanding is a must. At least that's the way gray-eyed Elizabeth sees the picture.

"Above all, both a lawmaker and his secretary must understand human nature," she says.

Several days ago Mrs. Kee assisted her husband in entertaining a group of distinguished Latin-American visitors. She was the only woman present at the luncheon. Husband John was the center of attention until the visitors, misunderstanding her Spanish pronunciation, gathered that she was a Senator and outranked the House

Biddle-Burr Nuptials Read At St. Alban's

Miss Evelyn Anne Burr, daughter of Dr. and Mrs. Samuel E. Burr, jr., and Eugene Dorr Biddle, son of Mrs. Margaret E. Biddle and the late A. G. W. Biddle, were married yesterday in St. Alban's Church with the Very Rev. Frank D. Gifford, dean of the Episcopal Divinity School, Philadelphia, officiating.

The bride, given in marriage by her father, wore an ivory satin gown with front skirt shirring and train. A braided satin and pearl bandeau held her illusion veil and she carried a white prayerbook with orchid and lilies of the valley.

Mrs. Ray Overholt of New Rochelle, N. Y., was matron of honor and other attendants were Miss Frances E. Felt, Miss Ruth Cooper of Washington; Miss Alice Lane of Boston and Miss Beryl F. Cosgrove of Waban, Mass.

James B. Biddle of Boston was his brother's best man and ushers included Samuel E. Burr 3d, brother of the bride; William J. Hetzler, Thomas B. Flynn, all of Washington, and Paul G. Lee of Schenectady.

Following a reception at the bride's home, Mr. and Mrs. Biddle left for a motor trip through New England. They will live in Cambridge, Mass., while the bridegroom continues his studies at Harvard Law School.

The bride is a graduate of Wellesley College in 1947. Mr. Biddle was graduated from the Georgetown University School of Foreign Service, class of 1948. He served in World War II as a member of the Sixty-third Infantry Division, AUS, from the beginning of 1943 to the end of 1945.

Miss Ann Lewis Harris, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. William H. Harris, and Jay Holbrook Johnson of Bradford, Pa., were married yesterday at 4 p.m. in the Metropolitan Memorial Methodist Church. A reception followed in the Louis Seize Room of the Shoreham Hotel.

The Rev. Ralph Delos Smith officiated at the service and Mr. Harris gave his daughter in marriage. The bride wore an ice blue satin gown with matching fingertip net veil held by a Juliet cap of net trimmed with seed pearls. She carried a bouquet of gardenias and lilies of the valley.

Miss Nancy Ward of Long Island, was the only attendant and John K. Thamm of Bradford, Pa., served as best man. Ushers were K. Ferris Thompson and Charles A. Gallagher, jr., also of Bradford.

The bride is the granddaughter of the late Albert Lewis Harris, well-known Washington architect. She is a graduate of Bartram School in Jacksonville, Fla.; Barnard College and the Carnegie Institute of Technology of Pittsburgh. Mr. Johnson is the son of Mrs. Marian Holbrook Henderson of Bradford.

He and his bride will make their home in Pittsburgh where he is studying architecture at Carnegie Institute of Technology.

Foreign Affairs chairman. Then she became the center of attraction. Enjoying the situation, she slipped her husband a note requesting him to keep the status quo. With a twinkle in his eyes, John replied, "The Senator from Bogota can keep the floor." Since then the sobriquet frequently greets her around the Capitol.

In addition to holding down a full-time office job, Mrs. Kee has authored a column, "Washington Tidbits," which was syndicated in West Virginia newspapers, and has taken an active part in activities of the Episcopal Church, of which she is a member. Back in the home State—West Virginia—she was a member of the church choir. Here in the Nation's Capital, she's active on the Congressional Club's advisory board as well as in the American Newspaper Women's Club.

Aside from work, Elizabeth's chief hobby is helping the physically handicapped. She understands their problems and helps whenever and wherever possible. For the past five years, in cooperation with a group of Episcopal ministers, she has been developing a hobby project and building up a library for the physically handicapped youngsters of the denomination. Once completed and launched, the project is to be enlarged to include children of all religions.

Mary Haworth's Mail

Widowed Three Years Ago, Woman is Unstrung By Friends' Enviously Critical Gossip About Her Elegant Style of Dress and Entertaining

DEAR MARY HAWORTH: Why is it that women whose husbands are still living are, for the most part, jealous of attractive widows?

My husband died three years ago and left me a large fortune, so that I can travel extensively and entertain lavishly; and I have a costly and beautiful collection of fine jewelry.

I am really modest and retiring by nature, and my husband, who was very generous, liked to have me always costumed in good and stylish clothes; but since his death some friends have criticized me for dressing so well and always being so well groomed.

Although good grooming has been a lifelong habit of mine, friends seem to have the idea, since I am a widow, that I am "dressing up" to capture a second husband. This is far from my mind or intention, as I have two lovely young daughters in whom I am most interested and I never intend to marry again.

My friends have been not only unkind in their remarks but very malicious in their gossip and criticism and as a result I am sick with worry. I really don't know what to do about them or how to deal with such jealous envious women. To help my morale, will you please give me some instructive advice or psychological information?

Incidentally, I never boast or brag about my possessions and never really make a lavish display. I have a trained voice and have studied in New York and Paris, and the wives seem to be jealous of my vocal talent, too. S. R.

A Gauche Stranger to 'Cat' Attitudes

DEAR S. R.: The unkind gossip you describe is called "catting" by certain amiable young ladies I know, who get around a good deal; and speaking from considerable close association with girls from diverse parts of the hemisphere, and from different types of homes, they say philosophically that "most girls 'cat' more or less," but it does no harm and doesn't hurt if you pay it no heed.

Which suggests that your experience of life, until widowhood, was rather more "sheltered" (by patron-protection) than exposed to the realities of human behavior in its unsentimental aspects.

In all probability your so-called friends were just as jealous, or privately as critical of you in former years as they are nowadays; but for expedient reasons they kept their carping views under their hat, or at least didn't thrust them on you, while your husband was alive—because his influence (and yours as his partner) was a force to be courted, not antagonized.

NOW THAT he is gone and you are without a knight-defender on the social scene, the catty dames feel much more free to uncorset their thoughts regarding you—because they fancy they've nothing to lose. But that's where they are wrong, of course; because every gouging comment they make about you has a blighting effect on their spiritual anatomy; and if they could get a candid-camera shot of their expression when blatting unkind gossip, they'd see a witch-face peering through.

Now, about yourself: It seems to me that you tend to be inordinately self centered in a childish, artlessly preening way, and no doubt general immaturity of mind and character is making widowhood a doubly difficult social assignment for you—as spiteful matrons let their masks fall.

For advice: It's your life, so don't let others rule it with their tongues. Be yourself, as the saying goes; always dress to look your best, and don't make vows against second marriage, because a good second husband, wisely chosen without haste—also without apology to "friends"—is the aid-to-morale you really need to revive self confident ease in social exchange. M. H.

The Family Scrapbook By Dr. Ernest G. Osborne

Any twins are a lot of fun! If they're identical they're even more so. But there are some things that those of us who are fortunate enough to be their parents must keep in mind.

First of all, it's important to give each a chance to feel his own individuality. Always being dressed exactly alike, constantly being referred to as "one of the twins," not having people able to tell them apart, and frequently being compared with each other can be emotional hazards. Naturally, both they and their parents will enjoy a bit of being dressed alike, be amused because people can't tell them apart, and like being identified with one another. But there should not be too much of a good thing.

Where possible, as they grow older, twins should be encouraged to develop some specific interest that are not closely shared with each other. They may be able to spend the summer apart now and again. If during school years it is possible to be in different sections of their classes, this is likely to be advisable, too.

Benefit Auction, Art Fair, Balls Interest Delaware Vacationists

By Virginia Cullen

REHOBOTH BEACH, DEL., Aug. 27.—The customary generous response of Rehoboth Beach vacationists to benefit affairs is expected to manifest itself in the large boardwalk benefit auction tomorow night.

The auction, staged by the local Kiwanis Club fo its underprivileged children's fund, will be held at the Henlopen Playhouse, and an entertainment program will follow. Maurice Stein is chairman of the benefit for the Kiwanis Club. He has obtained donations of handsome pieces of silver, china, and other valuable articles to be auctioned off at 8 o'clock.

Another boardwalk event this weekend will be the second clothes line fair of the Rehoboth Art League, to be held in the forecourt of the playhouse bordering the boardwalk. Mrs. Ralph Dawson of Wilmington, who handled the first one in July, has arranged to put on a traditional "country fair" show of bric-a-brac, choice ceramics, and other handicraft, in addition to the customary paintings strung along a typical clothes line. Special souvenir items of the fair will be a collection of Rehoboth beach scenes in black and white designed by this art colony's foremost artists, Mrs. Ethel P. B. Leach, and Miss Mary Mullineux. The fair will continue three days through Sunday night.

Lifeguard Ball

Hundreds of summer vacationists served as patrons and patronesses at the annual lifeguard ball of the Rehoboth Beach Patrol held last night over in the Lewes Fire Hall. Each summer toward the end of the season the grateful bathing populace gives the ball to raise a fund as a parting gift of appreciation to the college and high school boys who patrol the beaches to watch out for bathers' safety, while giving free swimming lessons to children at stated times.

Washington children captured many of the prizes for unique costumes at the third annual junior costume party. In the 5 to 7 age group Hubert Soutendyjk, son of Dr. L. R. W. Soutendyjk of the Netherlands Legation, won the "most original" prize, dressed as a typical "artist," while Preston Littleton of Washington was runner-up in a "Help-the-Blind-Man" get-up. Young Dick Leach upheld the prize-winning tradition of the family of the S. B. Leachs of Washington, when he placed third, dressed as a bottle of Carter's ink. His father was a prize-winner as "King Neptune" at the recent Bal de la Mer of the Art League. Small Cathy Bingham, daughter of the Herbert Binghams of Washington, took another prize as "Miss Has-been," garbed as a jaded belle of a worn-out era.

Little Judy Allnut, daughter of Dr. and Mrs. Y. V. Allnut of Chevy Chase, Md., copped the "prettiest" prize as a Persian dancer. Dr. Allnutt is spending the weekend with his family here at Rehoboth. The family has been entertaining Mrs. Allnutt's brother and sister-in-law from San Francisco, Mr. and Mrs. C. J. Shipaugh.

Beach Parties

With the cessation of the heat wave late vacationists are taking more to the open with picnics and beach parties. One of these planned for next Thursday in the Homestead Gardens in Henlopen Acres will be given by Col. and Mrs. W. S. Corkran for members of the Studio Group of Wilmington, who will come to Rehoboth that day to visit the two-man show of fellow artists, Eugenia Eckford Rhoads and Mrs. Charles J. Sala.

Hats Reflect Spirit of 20's—But You Wear Them With '49 Flair

THE HAT-HAPPY LASSIE gazing in yon hat bar window has stars in her eyes (even though you can't see them). Which one to choose is her problem, for she likes them one and all. There's that fetching black velvet toque at lower left, and a sister beret at lower right. Both are of heavy, rich fabric and trimmed with glistening simulated aigrettes. They're from M. Bachrach's.

The precious little evening shell-cap just above the toque is of white feathers, sprinkled in gold, and from its crown rises a white and gold quill and spray of white simulated aigrettes. It is from Erlebacher's, as is the butterfly-trimmed velour at top center. This one, a French original, is in a deep gold shade, the brim studded with varicolored stones

THE HEAD-HUGGING CLOCHE worn by the model is from Pasternak's. It is pale pink felt, trimmed with black velvet and a fan of jet feathers

Cloches, Berets Toques Popular

This is the fifth of a series of 10 articles on fall fashion trends.

By Peggy Preston

THE spirit of '26—1926 that is—is definitely haunting the hats of 1949.

But don't let that spirit frighten you. The old fellow is just hanging around on the fringes, and never, even in his most balmy days, was he able to match this year's bonnets.

Look at this season's version of the cloche and you'll see what we mean. The very name itself revives terrifying memories of hats that were like beehives, hugging the forehead and ears, clamping down on the head like formidable helmets. This was the accepted cloche of the 20's, and a far cry indeed from today's saucy little version.

Ours are snug and fit well down on the back and sides of the head. But they have a slant and flair all their own. They reveal the hairline over the brow and are becoming to almost every type of woman. Just a word of warning, however. To wear one you must have short hair. No long bobs need apply.

Cloche Most Popular

YOU'LL be seeing the cloche, and variations of it, in every type of fabric and in every price range, for it is the season's ranking hat silhouette. It may be had in inexpensive felts and velveteens as well as in rich, high-style velours and bejeweled velvets. Later on you will find it interpreted in fur—mink, persian lamb, broadtail, etc.

Next in popularity is the beret, a classic now that ranks along with a basic black dress in everyone's wardrobe. It too, may be elaborate or simple, formal or casual depending on your personal demands of it. Suede and corduroy, in a wide range of shades, are going into the spectator sports type of beret.

In more elegant versions one finds it made of velvet, satin, brocade or a jewel-studded fabric. The shimmering spirals of simulated aigrettes lend grandeur to many, transforming the lowly beret into a cocktail or evening hat of regal splendor. Black velvets, sewn with rhinestones or pink beading, are other glamour-packed versions that appealed to today's designers.

Higher Crowns

THERE are a half-dozen or more silhouettes to choose from this fall, each designed to suit various age groups and tastes. There is the toque—similar to the cloche—but pulled down over one ear and pinned, sometimes, with a side-sweeping feather. Turbans and tricornes are still around, and hats with big, wide up-sweeping brims are available for those who want them.

Crowns in general are a bit higher than we have been used to. The feeling of height is achieved also by the use of up-flaring brims, feather or other trimmings. The idea here is to add the effect of height which the shorter skirts have offset.

Vibrant Colors

AS with other aspects of fashion this winter, fabrics and colors play an important role. Shaggy surfaced fabrics, such as melusine (fur felt), velours, and hatters plush are seen in higher-priced hats, and colors radiate throughout all the price ranges. Vibrant reds are at the top of the list, and one finds a lot of gold tones, beige, winter blues, brick, copper and olive green.

You'll look smartest if you stick to an ultra-simple hat for daytime wear. Let it be a cloche or toque, for instance, small and unadorned, save for, perhaps, a bit of narrow ribbon. Save your feathers, jeweled pins and veiling for "after five" occasions, when clothing in general becomes more formal. Casual clothes of the type being offered this year call for simple hats. So don't ruin the picture with a fussy chapeau.

Tobé Says—

Calf and Velvet Smart With Tweeds This Fall

IF YOU are buying one of the smart new tweed suits this fall, you'll need equally smart casual accessories to wear with it.

First of all, this means calf shoes and bags. Calf pumps—closed toe, but in any heel height that you like. Calf bags—preferably big and soft and squashy—either underarm or satchel types.

Gold jewelry—flat gold collar necklaces; gold link and gold tag bracelets; gold earrings with short dangling drops; then new medium size gold pins.

Jersey blouses are traditional of course, but if you want to be ultra smart, follow the Dior fashion and wear a plain little velvet shirt and a tiny velvet beret or cap with your tweeds.

Tips for the Bride . . .

DID YOU know that forget-me-nots mean true love! lilac, first emotion of love; lily of the valley, happiness; pansy, think of me and coreopsis, love at first sight? Sweet peas say wilt thou go with me?; tea roses, you are lovely; primrose, inconsistency. It's fun to be wooed in love's floral language.

A SECOND-TIME bride may add enchantment to a simple little wedding by having her tiny daughter act as flower girl. No other attendants. (But be prepared to have her steal the bride's show.)

From "Modern Bride" Magazine.

Ask Anne — About Tinting Sweaters

I ripped two old hand-knit wool sweaters, one yellow and one old rose, and dyed the wool purple. In working up the sweater I find that there are two shades of purple not noticeable when the balls of wool were compared. After completion of the sweater, I should like to even out the colors. I do not want to dye again since I fear shrinkage. Will tinting be satisfactory and successful? I read your account of tinting in the bathtub so would you repeat bathtub process if advisable? How about the washing machine? C. K. E.

It seems worth a try, at least, to use tinting to cover up the color difference. To tint in the bath tub, dissolve the dye in a small amount of hot water and pour it into the bath tub through a cloth to eliminate any dye specks. Before putting the dye in the tub, put three or four inches of warm water into it. Thoroughly mix the dye into the water and put the wet sweater into it. Work the dye solution through the yarn well. When the dye has had time to be completely absorbed, rinse the sweater in clear water several times until the water remains clear.

The tinting could be done in lukewarm water in the washing machine, but do not allow the machine to run for more than three minutes to avoid matting the yarn.

If tinting does not make the colors the same, the only method which will do it is to remove all color from the sweater by using one of the color-removing products sold where dyes are sold, and redye. In the future this is the method you should use in redying yarns of different colors.

The August issue of the American Home Magazine had an article entitled "How to Make American 'Dresden.'" Can you tell me where in Washington I may purchase an art-store plaster figurine, as mentioned in the directions? H. L.

The art department of a stationery store on New York ave. has figurines suitable for this use on order and should receive them very soon. Fur further information I suggest you call the store at Republic 5850.

What do you do to clean the bottom of an electric iron? It sometimes leaves a stain on a garment that I am pressing. P. O. D.

When the iron is cold, wipe the sole plate of it with a scratchless scouring powder on a damp cloth. Continue scouring until iron is entirely clean, rinse and dry. Another way to remove light deposits is to rub the hot iron on waxed paper and then onto heavy unwaxed paper to remove the melted wax with the soil.

Top Recker
Interior Furnishings
Fabrics Accessories

TO THE GROWING NUMBER who feel most at home with modern design, it may be news that Top Recker has a varied collection of modern fabrics.

FOR INSTANCE Ray Komei's "The Big Catch"—fish shimmering behind a net in a wonderful effect of depth, on a heavy 50-inch cotton at $4.95 a yard. And 'Atmospheric Circles"—big free circles in fresh colors like chartreuse, pink and hunter green on white, or brick red and grey on a teal blue ground. Both of these prints are from Laverne Originals, and you'll find others from Knoll, Schumacher, Goodall, and other fine houses. As with all Top Recker fabrics, we have large samples (a yard or more) for you to try at home, and we'll order the yardage you need.

IF YOUR MODERN HOUSE poses the problem of big windows needing yards-and-yards versus an inflexible budget, Top Recker has ways of solving it! Fine modern prints can't be bought at bargain prices, so save them for small yardages—covering a chair, or even a pair of cushions. For the big windows, there are inexpensive plain fabrics that will provide the color you want at $2.00 a yard or less. Or you might like bamboo blinds. Their natural color and texture are right in many modern rooms and the cost is less than any drapery.

TOP RECKER brings the same understanding to all the problems of furnishing a home with contemporary feeling—carpets, rugs, wallpapers in unusual colors and designs, and furniture specially ordered to meet your needs.

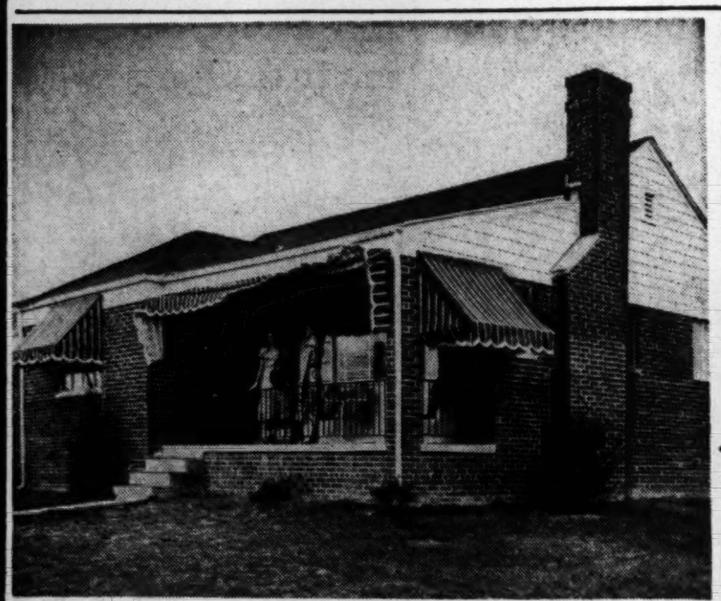
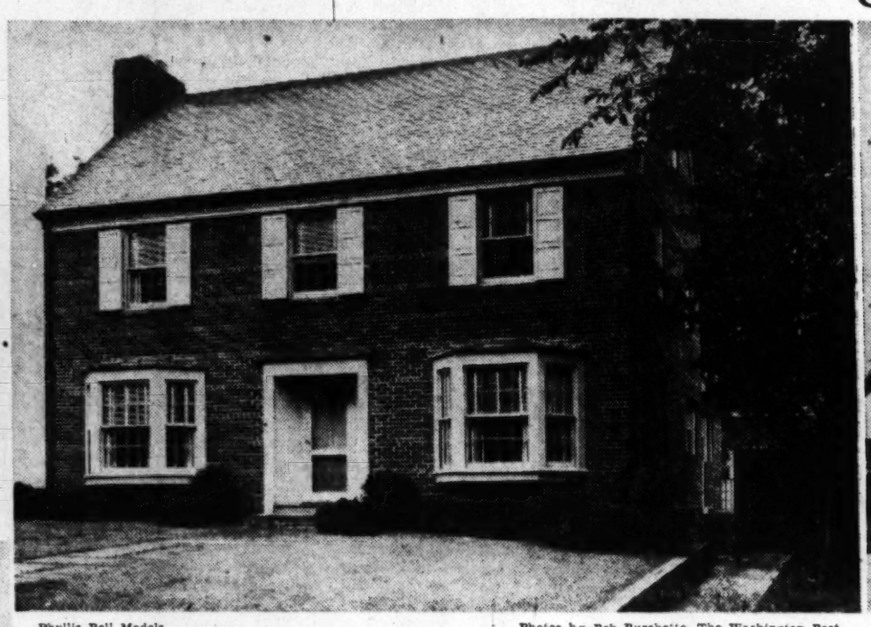
Public Interest in Housing at New High Here



Home in Carroll Knolls, Md., by Colonial Construction Co., is one of few in the housing exhibit boasting a front porch



Phyllis Bell Models

Photos by Bob Burchette, The Washington Post

Luxury colonial home at 3617 Appleton st. nw., built by James E. Schwab to sell for $49,500

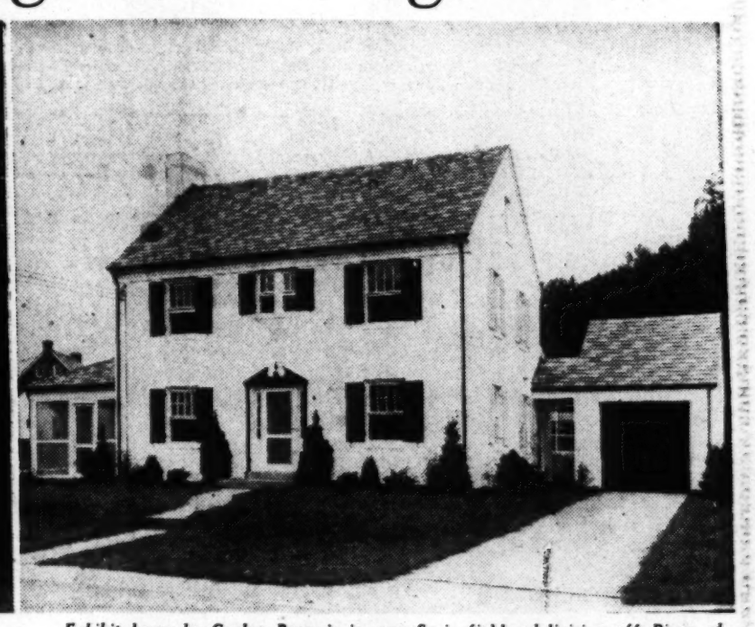


Exhibit home by Cooley Bros. is in new Springfield subdivision off River rd. Biggs will furnish the attractive residence

Carroll Knolls Popular Site In Maryland

UNLESS you take a tour of Silver Spring at least twice a year, it grows right away from you. The area off Georgia ave. extended probably ranks with Long Island, N. Y., as one of the Atlantic Coast's busiest construction sites.

From Forest Glenn rd., past Glenmont, the saw-and-hammer symphony is loudest. One of the most successful projects is the Carroll Knolls project of Colonial Construction Corp.

A model home at 2107 Dexter ave. is one of the nine furnished houses in The Washington Post sponsored "Homes of '49," which opens September 11 for four weekends. Milton R. Rossler is furnishing the $14,000 residence.

More Homes Started

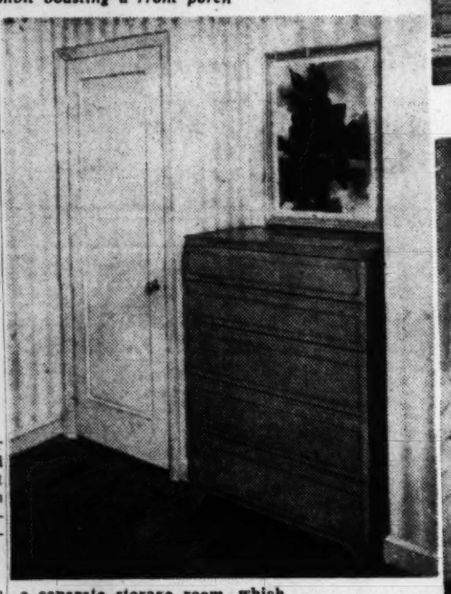
AN OUTSTANDING sales record has been recorded by Colonial Investment Co., agents, in the project of brick bungalows. Several new homes are now under construction.

A visit to the exhibit home shows a brick home with a recessed front porch on the living-room wing, enhanced by an iron railing. Awnings protect the porch and windows from the elements.

One enters the living room, with a fireplace and mantel and picture window. Straight ahead is the dining room, featuring a built-in cupboard, with both open shelves and closed doors for storage.

To the right of the dining room is the equipped kitchen. It includes a refrigerator, range and exhaust fan. There is sufficient space for a small table for light snacks.

Two bedrooms, tile bath and various closets complete the floor plan. The full basement has a separate storage room, which can be fixed up as a hobby room, repair shop, or food storage. Basement walls are waterproofed.



Smaller bedroom in the Colonial Construction Co.'s home has recessed area for placement of dresser. Furnishings are by Milton R. Rossler

Other features of the exhibit home include steel - beam construction, clear oak floors, metal venetian blinds and rock wool insulation. More than 30 similar homes have been sold in the same area.

Mrs. John M. Hunter, 1900 F st. nw., pretties up in the architecturally different, 3-compartment tile bathroom in the Schwab home. There is a separate water-closet compartment, shower cabinet and laving area. There are two sinks, two medicine cabinets, a large linen closet, plus a regular bathtub

'Homes of '49' Is Top Event

THE LOCAL home building industry flexed its muscles last month. This week it's puffing out its chest. The reason: July was the greatest home-building month in history in the Washington area.

Builders started 6210 homes and apartments here in a single month. Realty offices and subdivision developers report interest at fever pitch by the home-buying public. Open houses are drawing record crowds over weekends, with many persons returning on weekdays for a closer, unhampered inspection, prior to signing on the dotted line.

Interest in inspection and purchase of new homes and home furnishings is expected to be at its all-time high when The Washington Post-sponsored 'Homes of '49' opens on September 11.

The housing event, previously announced in past Sunday real estate sections of The Washington Post, will feature nine furnished and 11 unfurnished model homes situated at strategic locations over the metropolitan Washington area.

The majority of the homes have been erected especially for this yearly event. Many are just now on the last stage of construction. Those to be furnished will be turned over to furniture store decoration experts in plenty of time to be artistically and efficiently furnished in the latest available lines.

Purpose of the vast housing extravaganza is to show Washington residents what is available this year in both housing and furnishings. Home prices will range from a low of under $8000 to a high of $55,000. Agricultural styles vary from a ranch type rambler to a three-story Colonial. Prefabricated homes will be represented by the Gunnison line.

A tour of the 20 model houses will reveal to house shoppers the vast number of changes which have taken place in home construction, equipment and design. Many comfort-giving features that were not even in existence before the war will be incorporated into exhibit homes.

For example, there will be radiant heat, picture windows with double-pane glass, silent windows that open at the flip of your wrist, dishwashers, garbage disposers, mar-proof kitchen work counter, and other extras.

Gruesome Note: Heating Season Starts Sept. 26

WITH summer in its declining days, householders of almost half the Nation already have put their electric fans back in attics and with varying degrees of apprehension are awaiting that first chilly morning when a little furnace fire will feel good.

It may be "later than you think" on the weather clock, and certainly it's time to make sure heating systems in Washington are ready for Mr. Frost. Here, for example, the season normally begins on or about September 26.

In keeping their "date" with the weatherman this year, home owners are being aided by newly-developed automatic control instruments which literally take over a heating system in the autumn and operate it until spring without manual attention.

Building Costs Level, Down in Some Areas

CHICAGO, Aug. 27 (AP). — The assessed value of city property has jumped again. But building construction costs have leveled off somewhat and real estate prices have started down.

This was indicated in a Nation-wide survey of medium and large population areas made by the National Association of Assessing Officers.

The latest assessed valuations in 43 assessing jurisdictions of over 100,000 population averaged 4.3 per cent higher than for a year ago. A jump of 6.35 per cent was registered in a similar survey a year ago.

(The comparisons were between the 1949 and 1948 valuations except in 18 jurisdictions where they were between the 1948 and 1947 assessments.)

Comparing present-day building costs with a year ago, 18 jurisdictions reported them lower, 16 estimated they were about the same and six said they had risen. The decrease in the 18 jurisdictions ranged from 5 to 10%.

Of 27 districts surveyed regarding present-day real estate prices, only one estimated they had increased this year. All others reported declines. The drop was estimated at about 5 per cent in 12, between 5 and 10 per cent in 5, from 10 to 20 per cent in 5, and 20 per cent in 4.

Four Homes to Be Shown In Westinghouse Exhibit

TWENTY-THREE builders in major cities from coast to coast, including four Washington firms, are cooperating with the Westinghouse Electric Corp.'s Better Homes Bureau in constructing homes for exhibit during National Home Week, sponsored by the National Association of Home Builders, September 11 to 17.

Local builders and locations of their exhibit houses are Cooley & Sons, 5908 Springfield rd., opposite Kenwood Country Club, Md.; R. J. Beech, Inc., 401 Cambridge rd., Clover, Alexandria, Va.; L. E. Breuninger & Sons, Edgevale Terrace off East-West Highway, Md.; and Madison Manor, Inc., 1017 N. Powhatan st., Arlington, Va.

Cooley and Breuninger also will have competely furnished homes in the "Homes of '49" exhibition sponsored by The Washington Post, 9 furniture dealers and 20 builders.

The four Westinghouse homes will feature Westinghouse-planned kitchens, laundries and wiring, according to George Kindley, of Edgar Morris Sales Co., area Westinghouse distributor.

Westinghouse's Better Homes Bureau in Pittsburgh announced a cooperative plan proving extremely popular with builders. Under the plan, builders may forward their own blueprints to the bureau for service, or incorporate into their display homes the basic standards for the correct installation of appliances and wiring devices already developed by the bureau.

Westinghouse equipment to be on view in the model homes during National Home Week includes a refrigerator, range, laundromat, garbage disposer, electric water heater and kitchen ventilation fan. Some of the homes will also include a clothes dryer.

Builders and prospective buyers, reports the bureau, have discovered that "packaged" homes, in which all major electrical appliances are an integral part of the house, have a double advantage that leads to a quick sale and continued satisfaction to the purchaser.

Scientifically planned kitchens not only shorten the time that the housewife must spend in these areas, but also make the expense of remodeling at a future date unnecessary.

Since the appliances are installed when the house is built, they are paid for through the mortgage on the home itself, making short-term financing unnecessary. In some instances, these major appliances add as little as five dollars a month to the mortgage installment, the bureau declared.

New York Housing Costs Drop 11%

New York, Aug. 30 (U.P.).—Construction costs in the New York-New Jersey metropolitan area have decreased 1 per cent since March and 11 per cent since September, 1948, Dow Service, Inc. has reported.

The service said its survey showed that present construction costs in New York City are now 80 per cent above the prewar level. Last fall the figure was 102 per cent above the 1941 level.

The service said it would release a Nation-wide survey of construction costs in 150 cities about October 1.

A 15 Acre Building Site

HERE IN ANNE ARUNDEL COUNTY, 25 miles from D. C., adjoining South Haven near the Annapolis Free Way, lay 15 beautiful acres, a superb house location. Here, too, is the pleasure of restoration, the joy of breathing life into a dead thing, of adding modern comfort to an old-fashioned way of life. You can retain those features if you choose this site. You can add those which spell increased comfort and leisure and create a staunch and livable home. Many years ago this ground and the home housed a family. Not much remain of it today. No, you're not queer! To fall in love with this Old Style house may have associations for you that a new home never could. Maybe you're the kind of a person who would look stretched out in a modern home or cramped in a compact Colonial. Maybe the part standing is just right for the kind of person you are, proud of the past as you remember it, loving the leisurely, comfortable, hospitable life that a house like father's epitomizes for you. I'll come by some summer afternoon to see you sitting on a wide side porch and I'll wager 10 to 1 that when I wave to you, you'll wave back. $6,500 buys this and all the atmosphere that goes with it.

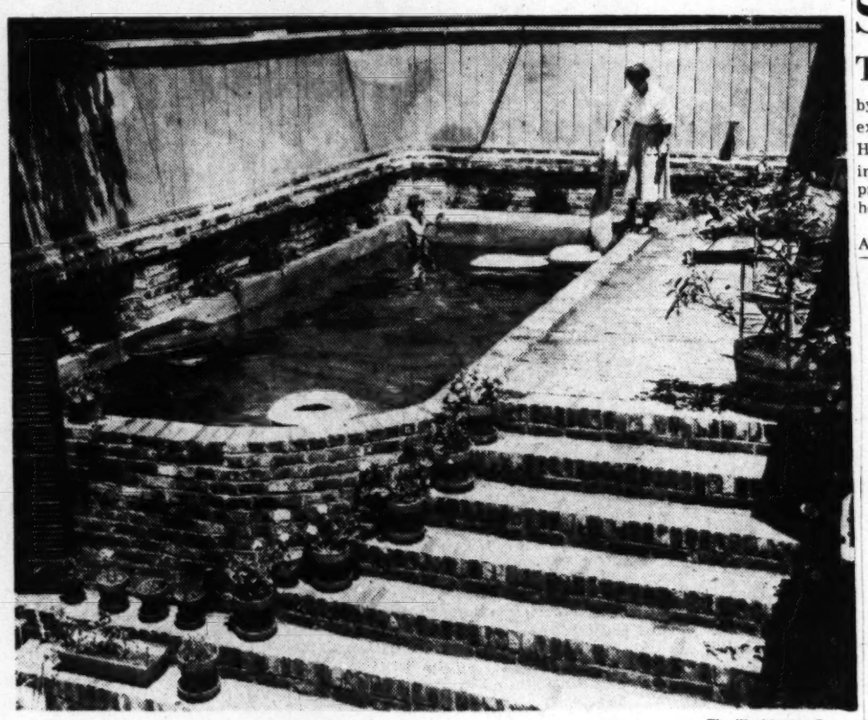
Ole Swimming Hole—'49 Style



The Washington Post

SUMMER heat waves are just laughed off at the home of Mr. and Mrs. Hardy Maclay, 309 Prince st., Alexandria. The Maclays purchased a row house, remodeled the interior and face-lifted the back yard into a delightful oasis. The 23x9½-ft. pool holds 5500 gallons, is made of brick and concrete. Estimated cost of both pool and terrace was put at $800 by Maclay, who hired a bricklayer for the job. The pool was built above the surface of the ground so it would be higher than the sewer. The terrace was then built up to the same level. In the picture Jordan Maclay, 7, is asking his mother for the "Seahorse"

Student Builders Erect 'Practice' House

THERE'S no better way to learn construction techniques than by building a house. And that's exactly what students at the local Home Builders Association training school are doing. The finished product will be a 12-by-12 wooden house built inside a classroom.

The project is under way at the Apprentice Training School, at Ayrlawn Farms, off Old Georgetown rd., in Bethesda, Md. The school was started in 1947 to produce skilled craftsmen for the local building trades.

A brick and cinderblock foundation for the "practice" home has been laid by the masonry class, and now the carpenters have taken over. So far, the subflooring has been laid and students are proceeding with floor plan layout and framing of walls.

Students learn all phases of home construction. New courses begin September 1, extending through next spring. Each class is limited to 20 pupils to assure individual instruction. Application may be made at the school at Ayrlawn Farms from Monday through Friday between 7 and 9 p. m.

Low Cost Home Sales Boom Here; One Project Attracts Over 6000

Semidetached brick homes on Texas st. se., built by Carr, Inc.

By Conrad P. Harness

CASH registers are ringing merrily for those builders erecting homes here costing under $12,000. A check of several low-cost projects reveals that builders can't keep up with the demand.

Developers of Kensington Estates, $9990 home project in nearby Maryland, sold 150 homes from two small "teaser" ads and a full page ad last Sunday. Only 75 homes are left.

For $9990, no down payment to veterans and a $71 monthly carrying charge, the buyer at Kensington Estates gets a 5-room, 2-bedroom brick home with plastered walls, oak floors, tile bath, plus a complete kitchen with electric dishwasher, garbage disposer, refrigerator and range. Builders are Brisker & Korth, Inc., and A. Campitelli Co., Inc.

'Hot Cake' Items

KAY CONSTRUCTION CO. recently announced plans for a large development of semi-detached brick homes off Viers Mill rd., Md. These first semi-detached homes ever built in Montgomery County sold like the proverbial hot cakes.

The construction schedule called for 62 homes to be built by January 1. So, 62 homes were sold promptly in a three-week period. The builders say they have plenty of land available and plan further construction next year. Cost of this year's home is $8995, with nothing down to approved veterans and $63 per month carrying charges.

Sales at Glenmont Village, large project off Georgia ave. extended, in Wheaton, Md., are averaging about 20 per week, according to Barnard J. Hastings, sales manager. Nearly 400 homes have been built by Earl J. Preston in the area.

Hastings estimated that out of the throngs that inspect the homes, about 5 per cent purchase. He estimated only 1 per cent sales result from crowds at higher priced projects.

Craftsmen Use Savings

"THE market's ripe for low-cost housing," he reported. Cape Cod, expansion attic homes in Glenmont Village sell for $9875, with no down payment to approved

Housing Exhibition to Show Latest Kitchen Equipment, Furnishings

home erected at 3617 Appleton st. nw., by James E. Schwab, are many innovations. There is a vast combination kitchen-laundry. The former is the "U"-type, step-saving layout, with over 25 storage cabinets. A 117-inch work counter and splashboard has been covered in linoleum.

The kitchen-laundry has fluorescent lighting fixtures, with a recessed light over the work counter. The laundry is equipped with a washer, dryer and ironer.

Materials and construction techniques used throughout the home are of America's top quality. For example, the ceiling is plaster on metal lath, insulation is glass wool, roofing is Vermont slate.

The downstairs has an entry hall, 15x24 living room with fireplace and bay window, 13x15 dining room with bay window, large kitchen-laundry, full tile bath, 14x14 study or bedroom, and a 12x15 screened porch opening off the living room and bedroom.

Upstairs there is a 15x25 master bedroom, two other bedrooms, one conventional sized tile bath, and one three-compartment bath. (See picture on Page 1, this section.) There is a huge walk-in closet with shelving on both sides, plus another large closet between the master bedroom and large bath.

There is a brick, two-car, detached garage opening off the alleyway. The lot is completely sodded and shrubbed.

Elsewhere on the exhibition front, the home of Cooley Bros. is nearing interior completion in the new subdivision of Springfield, just across the River Road entrance to Kenwood Country Club, in nearby Montgomery County, Md. It will be furnished by Biggs.

The model house is a two-story brick Colonial, with attached screened porch and garage. Architect is George Santmyers. Upstairs there are three bedrooms and two full baths.

Downstairs there is a center hall entrance plan, with large living room with fireplace, mantel and picture windows opening to the left as one enters. To the right is the dining room with chair rail. Behind the dining room is the luxuriously equipped kitchen, with exhaust fan, clothes washer and dryer, garbage disposal and laundry cabinet.

Between the living room and kitchen, facing the rear lawn, there is a cosy den and half bath. The third floor is finished off for storage, additional sleeping quarters or playroom.

There is a full basement with fireplace and outside entrance. Steel beams have been used to support the house firmly.

Homes in the exhibition will be opened Sunday, September 11 at 12 noon and will remain open until dark. On week days and following Sundays, the homes will be open from 2 p. m. until dark.

Varnish Could "Take It"

An important use of varnish for many decades has been on spars and other exposed parts of ships. Hence the name "spar varnish." A weather resistant coating of this type is also used on many other surfaces exposed to the elements—station wagons and doors, for instance.

No Stone, Mortar in Alcoa's New Skyscraper

PITTSBURGH, Aug. 27 (AP).—Skyscrapers of the future may be made without stone, brick or mortar.

Aluminum and stainless steel manufacturers have developed all-metal "curtain walls" which can be used in place of traditional building materials.

Curtain walls are only 3 to 6 inches thick, with a resulting saving in floor space. They consist of relatively thin-gauge metal, backed by insulation, and furrowed to prevent blinding light reflections and to increase wind strength. Their use has been approved by underwriting laboratories and modernized building codes.

The new method already has been put to everyday use. The Aluminum Co. of America, which first built a pilot plant of aluminum at Davenport, Iowa, now is constructing a 30-story skyscraper office building in Pittsburgh's "Golden Triangle."

The 10-million-dollar Alcoa office building on Sixth ave. will have exterior surfaces completely made of aluminum except for window panes

Other pioneering in curtain-wall construction has been done by the Allegheny-Ludlum Steel Corp., which furnished stainless steel panels for a four-story office building at the General Electric Co. plant in Schenectady, N. Y.

Three to 6-inch thick curtain walls compare with masonry walls of from 18 to 40 inches thick. Allegheny-Ludlum and Alcoa officials says there is no need for the thicker walls in steel framework buildings. They say the exterior surface is needed principally to keep the elements out and the occupants in. The walls do not hold up the building or make it strong.

An architectural consultant for Allegheny-Ludlum contended thin walls permit a saving in space that amounts to as much as two-thirds of a square foot per lineal foot of exterior wall for every floor above street level.

He cited Rockefeller Plaza in New York as an example, declaring that if its walls were as thin as curtain walls, a total of 112,490 square feet could have been saved. At $4 per square foot, the saved space could have been rented for $450,000 a year.

Allegheny-Ludlum said curtain-wall construction compared favorably in cost with masonry, adding: "It's generally accepted that masonry costs about $3 per square foot. We don't think stainless steel and insulation will cost any more."

Alcoa claims curtain walls of aluminum, backed by four inches of cement insulation, won't cost as much as masonry.

Real Estate Briefs From Here and There

WASHINGTON may be the hottest city in the world, to take the word of those suffering from this summer's intense heat, but it is also the most highly air conditioned. While sidewalks, offices and Government buildings reflect the rays of a torrid sun, at the same time air-conditioning equipment of all makes and descriptions is pouring forth refrigerated air at the rate of .122 tons per person—the highest per capita rate in the United States.

These are the comforting words of F. M. Thuney, local manager of the Minneapolis-Honeywell Regulator Co. which manufactures controls for all types of air-conditioning equipment and keeps a finger on the air-conditioning pulse Metropolitan Washington, according to a survey by Thuney, continues its battle against the heat with a steady pace of new air-conditioning installations.

"Figures just compiled show that in the first six months of this year 135 large industrial and Government air-conditioning systems were installed," Thuney said. "They added 3697 tons of cool air capacity to the area, and brought the total for this type of equipment to 4508 installations on the power lines at present, with a total capacity of 122,890 horsepower or tons of refrigeration."

To Federal workers sweltering in nonair-conditioned offices, it may be small consolation to know that the United States Government maintains 244 air-conditioning systems in Washington with a capacity of 62,533 tons. And up until July 1, Uncle Sam this year had invested in four new systems with 816 additional tons of capacity.

The Minneapolis-Honeywell Regulator Co. report shows that air conditioning in Washington has kept pace with the growth of commercial building in the area. Some of the larger rent installations have included that of the DuPont Plaza apartment hotel with 297 horsepower, the Miatico Building with 366, Neisner's with 369½, and Jelleff's in Silver Spring with 122.

The recently installed 493 horsepower air-conditioning system of the United States Chamber of Commerce is another of the city's large commercial installations.

Although portable and residential units present a problem to the fact finder, Mr. Thuney's report shows there were 826 residential air-conditioning systems installed so far this year with a cooling capacity of 917 tons of refrigeration.

So, hot or cold air—Washington has it.

The M. H. Barry Organization, veteran Alexandria realty house, has announced the appointment of Richard H. Bailey as administrative and executive assistant to Mr. Barry. Bailey is a graduate of Syracuse University where he majored in Administrative Engineering. He served overseas with the Eighth Air Force, gaining the rank of major before his discharge in 1945. Prior to his employment with the Barry firm, he was in the real estate business in Syracuse. He will make his home permanently in Alexandria.

BAILEY

The most rapid upswing in mortgage lending volume between any two months in the 118-year history of savings associations was noted from May to June, 1949. The United States Savings and Loan League says that the rise was 12 per cent, bringing June volume of loans for all purposes to 321 million dollars. Loans for construction of new homes were the principal reason for the rapid uptrend, accounting for 98 million dollars of the June total.

Public housing under the recent Housing Act of 1949 will get off to a slow start, according to the Housing Institute, Inc., which analyzes real estate, building and lending trends.

A Housing Institute survey of a large number of Public Housing Authorities all over the country indicates that most plans are still in the formative stage. Response also indicates that the great bulk of the communities participating in the survey do not expect to get construction actually under way for at least six months, and in most cases, longer.

A one-week lecture course in "Principles of Real Estate Management" will be given October 3 to 7 at the Commander Hotel, Cambridge, Mass., sponsored by the Institute of Real Estate Management and cooperating New England organizations.

Carey Winston, certified property manager and active Washington realtor, is one of the four-man faculty. Applications for enrollment should be sent to IREM, 22 W. Monroe st., Chicago 3. Tuition for the course is $75.

A Wall Street Journal survey of six large cities which recently have shed rent controls reveals that few cases of rent scalping have occurred. Predictions that rents would soar 60 per cent have proven false. Conclusions of the paper included: Many landlords have not boosted rents at all; the average increase has been moderate. Evictions have not risen generally.

The report showed that 42 public housing projects were built within the last 42 months at a cost of some 450 million dollars.

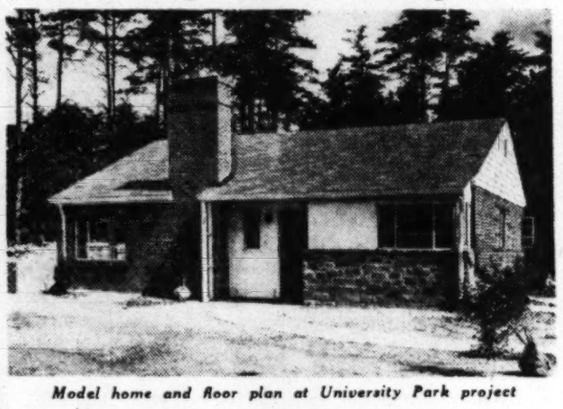
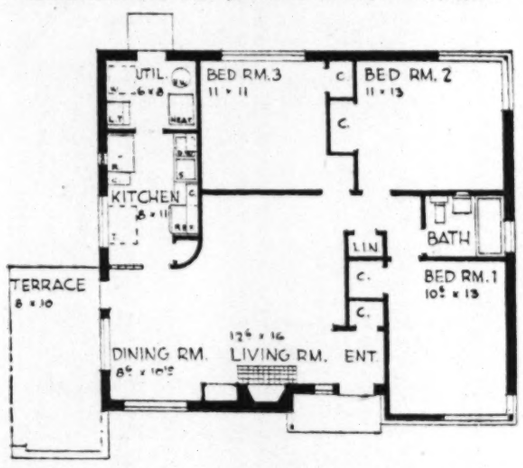
Brick, Fieldstone Bungalows Under Way in University Park



Model home and floor plan at University Park project



Crowds estimated at more than 2000 last Sunday visited a home-building project of new bungalows in nearby Maryland, purchasing all 10 homes under construction and two more still "on paper."

The residences are being erected by Potomac Construction Co. on Beechwood rd., University Park, Prince Georges County. They sell for $14,950. Ads announcing the project appeared in The Washington Post.

Melvin Robinson of David R. Wallace Co., brokers, said the construction program would be expended to make more homes available. He reported a high percentage of large cash down payments by last Sunday's buyers, with only one second trust note taken.

The homes have three bedrooms, one of which is pine-paneled for use as a study or den. The living room has a fireplace, built-in bookcases and liquor cabinet and two picture windows. A model home is open.

Exterior of the homes is fieldstone, brick and redwood paneling. The homes are guaranteed by the builder against structural and mechanical defects for a one-year period, Robinson stated. Dwellings are situated on lots with 70 to 90-foot frontages, with 125-foot depths. Six of the houses were reported already sold.

2 Building Projects To Start Here Soon

The District is the site of two separate building projects to be started immediately. A permit application has been filed by Walter Valentine calling for construction of 14 homes at 75-95 and 76-90 54th st. se. Units will be 2-story and basement, of brick construction, measuring 19 by 32 feet in floor area.

Morris Miller will sponsor construction of 5 dwellings on Kalmia rd., near Alaska ave. nw. Humphrey & Quigg is the building firm. Sub-bids are being taken.

Permit Asked for 12 Southeast Dwellings

Continuation of its program of semi-detached brick homes in the Southeast is indicated by a permit application by Carr, Inc., covering 12 dwellings to be erected in the 4300 block of E st. se. Homes are two-story and basement, measuring 16 by 26 feet in floor area.

Bungalows for Arlington

Crestwood Construction Corp. plans to erect four brick bungalows at 6845-51-57 28th st. N. and 2721 N. Westmoreland st., Arlington, Va. A building permit has been issued.

10 Projects Planned in Maryland

MARYLAND builders broke out in a rash of plans last week, topped by a permit application for 113 more dwellings at the huge Viers Mill Village, near Wheaton, Md., where hundreds of homes are already completed and occupied. The Viers Mill homes are 2-bedroom bungalows selling for $8700, with no down payment to qualified veterans.

Elsewhere in the Maryland area, the following building firms have either filed for, or received, a building permit for the following projects:

Seventeen homes in the 3900 and 4000 blocks of 73d ave., Hyattsville, by D. R. and M. L. Partello; brick bungalows, with no basements.

Just Like Plumbing

Built-In Video, Radio for New Houses

CHICAGO, Aug. 20.—In 20 years your radio cabinet probably will be about as obsolete as a wood-burning cook stove, according to Dr. Howard C. Hardy, supervisor of acoustics and vibrations research at Armour Research Foundation of Illinois Institute of Technology.

Dr. Hardy believes that radio amplifiers, speakers, and whole sound systems will be built into the walls of houses within the near future and will become as much a part of any building as plumbing and electrical wiring.

"People are beginning to demand better sound reproduction and better acoustics in their homes," Dr. Hardy said. "Radios, phonographs, and television units are becoming as essential in a home as a refrigerator.

"And the public hasn't so far demanded them because very few people have ever heard really good sound reproduction except in a certain few theaters and auditoriums," he said.

Good sound reproduction has been considered too expensive, Dr. Hardy pointed out. It has not been readily available except in custom-built models, and the difference between fair and good sound reproduction is a subtle one, he said.

"Most families have at least one master radio in their home, usually in the living room," Dr. Hardy said. "Even families of quite moderate means will spend as much as $250 for this radio, and often up to $500, especially when it is equipped with a record changer."

"As much as 60 per cent of this price is in the cabinet and in the markup at the retail store. A really good set, giving excellent reproduction, can be built in for this amount of money," Hardy said.

He pointed out that one company already is building in radios and television sets in redesigned homes and rooms. A Chicago firm recently began installing amplifiers and speakers as part of rooms, then custom-building the face of the unit to fit the room.

Bulbs Add Freshness And Charm to Garden

By Katherine Barrett Pozer

FLOWERS must be planted close to the house if the garden is to be enjoyed at all seasons. Strategically placed, they can be viewed from a favorite window or porch. Spring flowers that bloom early are particularly important in such a planting.

Many of the small bulbous things are too often overlooked when scanning the bulb catalogues. Once you are aware of the charms and usefulness of many of the small bulbs, they will always be included in yearly orders.

In a collection of several varities they add charm in early spring. Some of the late blooming varieties give a fresh note to a jaded fall garden.

Crocuses and early spring have been long associated in most gardeners' minds. Nothing is more welcome than the first bits of gold and blue that sometimes spring up when the snow is on the ground. But many persons do not realize that vast improvements have been made in crocuses. Their season of bloom has been increased, coloring made more varied and many are much larger in size than the old familiar ones of yesterday.

A ring of crocuses around a tree makes a lovely planting. They can remain undisturbed when the lawn is cut, for the tops must be allowed to ripen.

Nothing is more welcome in spring than the first bits of blue and gold, heralding the arrival of crocus

Try These Tulips

WINTER aconite, with its yellow blooms, is too seldom used. It will blossom in late winter and often earlier in a warm year. Planted in drifts with snowdrops and other small early bulbs, they make a charming picture. Difficulties in growing aconite are often caused by their being planted too late. They must make their root growth before cold weather sets in.

The heavenly shade of blue of the scilla siberica makes it one of the best loved of all the bulbs. Its willingness to bloom and spread is surprising in a small flower of such delicate appearance. It grows in sun and shade.

When considering a bed for small bulbs the "Little Lady" tulip, the Clusiana, should be included. Its slender, flamelike blooms of creamy coloring have markings of red, reminding one of a peppermint stick.

They add a spirit of gaiety to a rock garden or flower bed. They grow to about 12 or 14 inches and should be placed where they are not overshadowed by larger varieties.

The Kaufmanniana, the waterlily tulip, is another bulb that shows to best advantage with other small things such as are grown in a rock garden. It blooms quite early. Like a water lily in form, with its carmine backed creamy petals, it makes a good color contrast for the delicate shades of some of the other spring early bloomers.

Petunias Over Bulbs

THERE are a number of summer flowering bulbs, most of which need digging and storing each year. But if one has other flower beds besides the special one for early spring enjoyment, it is advisable that a planting of petunias be made over the bulbs. This will help rather than harm the bulbs.

It is suggested that petunias and other annuals be cut close to the ground when they have finished blooming.

Enjoy Garden Surplus All Year By Canning, Deep Freezing

By James H. Beattie

MANY Washington area gardens are now producting surplus fruits and vegetables adapted to preservation by canning or freezing. There's also an abundance of fruit and vegetables on the market and this is a very favorable time to restock the fruit cupboard and the home freezer.

Sweet corn, beans, peaches, apples and grapes are now available either from the home garden or commercial sources.

To Can or Freeze

Only quality material is worth the cost of the containers and labor involved in preservation.

Preservation by freezing or canning requires careful preparation. A few suggestions are offered covering some of the more important fruits and vegetables that are especially worth-while when preserved by freezing.

PEACHES: Highly colored, tree-ripened fruit should be used. It usually pays to go to an orchard and obtain ripe fruit for prompt handling. Although the ripe-mellow fruit may be subject to some waste, the quality usually justifies this loss, which, however, is nearly always offset by the reduced cost of the fruit that is too ripe for commercial shipment.

These who have their own trees may leave the fruit until it reaches the right stage of ripeness. Only quality varieties should be used. Golden Jubilee, Hale Haven and Triogem are very excellent orts for freezing.

Peaches should be thoroughly washed, peeled and sliced directly into the containers and immediately covered with a previously prepared and cooled cane sugar syrup made by dissolving from ¾ to 1 cup of sugar in each cup of water.

The fruit may also be prepared as a sundae topping by crushing and mixing with one part sugar to three parts peaches. Unless handled very rapidly, excessive darkening of the crushed fruit may occur. The paper cups fitted with crimped lids that are commonly used for ice cream and other products are well adapted to the freezing of peaches and other fruits.

Mason jars with cellophane covers tied tightly over the tops to exclude the air and prevent loss of moisture also serve well. High-quality frozen peaches are very nearly as good as the fresh product direct from the tree. Such products should be removed from the freezer several hours before they are to be used.

STRAWBERRIES: The season has passed but they should be included in the list of materials to be frozen next year. A relatively small planting of strawberries will provide enough for immediate use and for freezing. The fruits should be thoroughly vine-ripened and of a bright red color. Thorough stemming to remove every particle of the green flower parts and washing through several changes of water is important.

The berries are sliced directly into the containers and then covered with a syrup made by using 4 cups of cold water, 2 cups of corn syrup and 3 cups of sugar. Either the paper cups with the crimped covers or glass jars may be used. WARNING—Strawberries expand greatly while freezing and the containers should be left about 7/8 full.

The berries may also be crushed and mixed with sugar, usually about 3 parts berries to 1 part sugar, and packed for use as a sundae topping. The quality of properly prepared frozen strawberries is practically equal to that of the fresh berries.

Here in her canning corner, with everything needed for the job mobilized for a speedy operation, this young housewife packs hot tomatoes from the kettle, where they had been heated to a rolling boil, into hot jars. Her goal is to get the jars, with their lids adjusted, into the canner while they are still piping hot

Vegetables for Freezing

Lima beans, peas and sweet corn deserve particular attention. It's too late for peas this season but they may be kept in mind for 1950. Sweet corn and lima beans are now in their prime.

All must be gathered while at the peak of edible maturity and promptly processed to retain this quality. Peas and sweet corn suffer particularly in quality if not gathered at just the right stage of maturity, and delay in processing greatly lessens the quality of the frozen product.

Waterproofed cartons, usually one or two pints in size, with inner envelopes of special paper capable of sealing by means of heat are quite satisfactory.

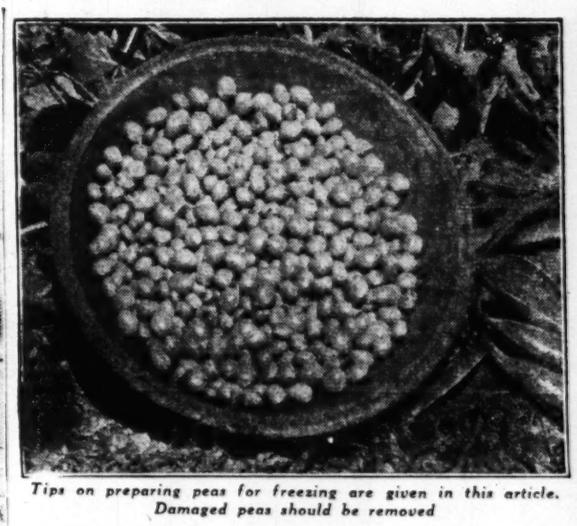
PEAS: Sort out over-age pods, shell, again sort to remove old, damaged or over-age peas, thoroughly wash, scald in boiling water for one minute, cool rapidly in very cold water, fill the containers, seal and place immediately in the freezer. Laxton's Progress and Freezonian are varieties that are largely used for freezing.

LIMA BEANS: Follow the same methods as for peas but scald for 1½ to 2½ minutes according to the size of the beans. Rigorously discard all over-age seeds, usually shown by the loss of the green color. Fordhook and King of the Garden are popular sorts for freezing.

SWEET CORN: Under unfavorable weather conditions or after harvesting, the sugar in sweet corn may turn to starch within a few hours and the preparation of quality frozen sweet corn requires very prompt handling.

Best results follow when there is a lapse of only a few hours between the removal of the ears from the plants and the placing of the prepared product in the freezer. Only those ears that are in prime eating condition should be used for freezing. Excellent results have been obtained with Golden Cross Bantam and Evergreen Hybrid but there are many other good varieties.

After husking, silking and trimming, the ears should be placed in boiling water for two minutes, cooled quickly in cold water, drained, cut off and packed into the containers and sealed. Four to five average-size ears will fill a one-pint container. The containers should be placed in the freezer as rapidly as they are filled and sealed.



Tips on preparing peas for freezing are given in this article. Damaged peas should be removed vets and a $65 monthly carrying charge. Buyers must make at least $3400 annually to qualify for loans, it was added.

While most buyers put no cash down, Hastings declared, many building craftsmen such as sheet metal workers, bricklayers and carpenters are putting down $2000 to $3000 on their homes, thus reducing the monthly carrying charges.

The office of R. H. Best, which recently announced 2-story homes for sale at $8250 in Rockville, Md., reported 10 homes, all that were available, were sold in one weekend after a brief advertising and publicity campaign. Plans are underway to erect more homes, of a similar design costing up to $8650, in the same area.

Long Waiting Line

ELSEWHERE in Rockville, the developers of Twinbrook, Inc., large project off Viers Mill rd., reported sensational crowds resulting from large ads, with 6000 persons estimated at the project on one Sunday. A waiting line to inspect the model home was over a block and a half long.

Wesley I. Sauter, Twinbrook official, said most persons interested in purchasing return three or four times during the following week to inspect the home more closely. Dwellings sell for $9550 to $9700. About 134 have been sold. Around 600 are planned in the project.

The gigantic Viers Mill Village subdivision, with around 800 homes erected off Viers Mill rd., between Wheaton and Rockville, Md., plans to complete about 150 more before calling it quits. Homes sell for around $8800. An estimated 80 will be put on the market in the next 90 days.

One of 27 homes to be erected by Curtis E. Martin, Inc., at Engleside, Va., to sell for $8500 on ½-acre lots. Completed homes will have two bedrooms, tile bath, plastered walls, disappearing stairway to storage attic, and utility room instead of a basement. On a $500 down payment, veterans will pay $42.23 monthly, not including taxes, insurance. Home above is under construction

Myron Ivey, sales manager for Colonial Investment Co., Viers Mill Village sales agents, predicted all the new homes would be sold in advance of construction.

Ivey's firm also is sales agent for Plymouth Woods, in Alta Vista Terrace, Bethesda, opened to the public last week.

Orders for new homes are being taken from a model house at the project. The residences are priced at $11,250. Four have already been sold. A crowd estimated at 500 inspected the project last Sunday, with sales expected to accelerate in the next few weeks.

District Sales Boom

WOODSIDE Realty Co. reported 97 homes completed in Wheaton by Melwood Developers, with only a few remaining for sale at $10,950. The buyer gets a brick and frame home with full basement, two bedrooms, tile bath, hardwood floors and plastered walls. An estimated 15 to 20 additional homes will be erected.

In the District, Carr, Inc., has met no sales resistance in their home project in the southeast, around Fort Dupont and Fort Chaplin.

The firm, headed by Edward R. Carr, is building 130 semi-detached, 5-room brick homes selling at $9950, with no down payment to qualified veterans. Eighty-eight six-room homes have already been completed costing $11,100 to $11,500, with more planned for an early start.

In Virginia, Mace Properties, Inc., are selling the last of its 370-home West-Lawn project, off Lee blvd., in Falls Church. Dee Kelley, sales manager, said the sales campaign started June 19.

The last home is scheduled for completion by January 1. Kelley reported a very low rate of application rejections of buyers from the Veterans Administration and by Federal Housing Administration, both of which guarantee portions of the loans made by leading institutions.

New Project to Start

GROUND is expected to be broken in the next few days for a 350 low-cost home project off Telegram rd., just outside the Alexandria City limits, by Milton G. Smith, Arlington developer.

Smith said the homes will be of three types and will sell for an estimated $8500 to $9750. Dwellings will have 5 rooms, with 2 bedrooms, bath, living room, dinette, kitchen, full basement and expansion attic.

A third Virginia developer, C. F. Woodroe, has sold 17 homes by taking orders from a completed model house in his Westhampton project, off Haycock rd., adjacent to Falls Church. The basic home costs $9975, with $1475 down and $65 per month carrying charges.

Plaster Wall Finish

A new plaster wall should not be painted until it has thoroughly dried out.

A MONTH COVERS ALL CHARGES including principle, interest, insurance, taxes, etc.

Veterans who sign for 2-bedroom homes at Viers Mill Village today will be moving in before the leaves turn brown. October occupancy is promised.

This is the last group of homes to be offered here for $58 a month. The Park and Planning Commission, which had previously purchased seventy-five acres of this land for a park, has released enough acreage for 91 homes bordering the park.

Viers Mill Village is the greatest thing that has happened to veterans in the entire Washington area. No down payment is required. All the cash needed is $160 to cover prepaid items of insurance, taxes, etc. Monthly payments are only $58. This covers principal, interest, taxes, insurance—even your savings.

Viers Mill Village Homes have many wonderful features besides the two beautiful bedrooms, the living room, the kitchen and bathroom. These homes are built with basements—nice, big, roomy basements that can be converted to playrooms, club cellars and workshops. Every home has automatic gas heating and hot water—one of the best known makes money can buy. That goes for the refrigerator, too—and the gas range, the cabinet sink and everything else right out to the shingles. Doors are weatherstripped. Also included are aluminum screen doors, window screens and window shades. Kitchen and bathroom floors are covered in bright, durable asphalt tile.

The ground these homes are built on measures 55 and 60 feet in width by 100 to 150 feet in depth. Rolled, sodded lawns all around provide a safe, healthful place for the children to play. The entire community has been planned to create a lovely suburban setting.

Every facility for good living has been provided at Viers Mill Village. Transportation, schools, churches, and all other needs are part of the plan. A new modern shopping center is under way. Leading business firms will operate the last word in modern food markets, variety stores, apparel stores, beauty parlors, barbershops, drug stores—even a thousand-seat moving picture house. The recreation center will also include the newest thing in bowling alleys.

Veterans earning slightly more than $50 a week can qualify for one of these homes. Ride out to Viers Mill Village today . . . select any home you want bordering the park . . . and make arrangements for October occupancy. This is the home to move your family into. All this beautiful living is yours for $58 a month.

Tuitions Increased, Facilities Expanded

Scarcity of Jobs a Factor In Record Enrollments

HIGHER education is still big business. Even though the number of GIs is declining, colleges, universities and professional schools drawing students from the Washington area are booming.

Educators, who had expected enrollment to drop off this year in most colleges, are finding that applications for admission are setting new records.

Colleges with limited enrollments already have filled their freshman classes. Other schools find that they will have the biggest freshman enrollment in their histories.

Speculating on the new volume of students, the educators say fewer job opportunities for high school graduates, the GI emphasized interest in education and the overall prosperity of more parents are directing more youth than ever before into colleges and professional schools.

Optimistic that the trend will continue, schools are expanding facilities, adding new courses and acquiring additional faculty members.

Mixed Blessing

MANY of the educators though, regard their booming enrollments and burgeoning campuses as a mixed blessing.

Shrinking dividends on endowments have forced them into fund-raising drives or into increasing tuition to meet costs of expansion. There is a danger that if tuition goes much higher the price of an education will be beyond the means of the average student.

Only one school, Montgomery Junior College, has been able to cut tuition. Supported by Montgomery County and the State of Maryland, the college this year will cut its tuition as much as 50 per cent.

Dormitories Rising

ON NEARLY every campus new buildings are going up.

When school opens this fall Maryland University will move into new engineering laboratories. New dormitory additions are under construction. A new stadium is planned.

Marjorie Webster Junior College will nearly double facilities with a new dormitory, classroom building and auditorium now under way.

Washington Missionary College is enlarging science laboratories and adding a radio music building.

Work on a new engineering and architecture building at Howard University will begin this fall. Ground soon will be broken for the university's new law and biology buildings.

American University has plans for a new downtown school to replace the present cluster of buildings at 19th and F sts. nw. The university this fall adds a law school to its graduate division with acquisition of the old Washington College of Law.

Georgetown University will offer a new major in languages, adding to its school of foreign services an Institute of Languages and Linguistics.

Curriculum Changes

GEORGE WASHINGTON UNIVERSITY students, who for more than 15 years have spent free hours in the subterranean Student Club, located in the basement of one of the college buildings, will move above ground into a new four-story Student Union building.

Taking advantage of the facilities of Lisner Auditorium, one of the best equipped university theaters in the country, George Washington will broaden its courses in theater and speech.

Other curriculum changes announced by the schools show a growing awareness by educators of the need to train students for new jobs opening up in foreign fields and in the many agencies of the United Nations.

The new language institute at Georgetown University is one approach. Another is a program of Western Hemisphere study drawn up by the faculty of American University with the aid of diplomatic representatives of the Latin-American countries and Canada.

For New Buildings

Virginia U. Plans To Spend 4 Million

By W. H. Wranek Jr.

CHARLOTTESVILLE, Va.—The University of Virginia this year will round out a full 125 years since classroom doors were first opened.

During the last two sessions the enrollment has exceeded 5000. With the graduation of many former GI students, university officials anticipate a slight drop below this figure during the academic session which opens with registration September 16.

The faculty is being enlarged, however, and the curriculum expanded.

The University of Virginia's first session was opened March 7, 1825, and 123 students had enrolled before the year was out.

For the session of 1949-50 some decrease is expected in the college of arts and sciences, which may be 10 per cent smaller than last year.

Building Plans

CONSTRUCTION costing $714,000 is expected to be completed during the year ahead and bids are to be asked for additional buildings to cost $2,750,000.

New Face for Student Union

G. W. to Have That 'Clubby' Look

GEORGE WASHINGTON UNIVERSITY will afford its students all the cozy comforts of a private town club when classes get underway October 3.

By then, the Student Union at 2125 G st. nw. will be completely equipped and refurbished.

The union, located in a four-story building which was formerly a hotel, has been remodeled after the modern style of architecture.

Here the university, which is only a few blocks from the White House, will offer the relaxations of food, music and games.

The second floor, a social lounge, and the third floor, a reading lounge, have been in use since Dr. Cloyd H. Marvin, GW president, turned the keys to the building over to the students during ceremonies May 16.

Three Meals

SUMMER school students were first to use the cafeteria and snack bar, which now serve breakfast and lunch, and will serve dinner as well when the fall term begins.

The fourth floor will be known as the game room. Three radio-phonograph combinations will be available in soundproof booths; two pianos will be located at opposite ends of the spacious lounge. There will also be tables and chairs for bridge fans.

Activity for freshmen and transfer students will begin with an orientation week starting the first day of registration, September 28, through September 30, from 9 a. m. to 7 p. m. in Building C, 2029 G st. nw.

Some Changes

THE following changes in courses have been announced for the coming session:

The department of speech will offer a program leading to a master of arts degree in dramatic art for the first time. Courses in period techniques, acting, and scene design will be introduced. The course in theater management inaugurated last fall will be extended from a one-semester to a two-semester course.

Journalism will be offered for the first time as a major subject leading to a bachelor of arts degree. Courses have been added in copy editing and makeup, public relations, newspaper advertising, reporting of national and international affairs and law of the press. Courses in reporting, feature writing and editorial writing will be continued.

Prof. Robert Dale Campbell, executive officer of the geography department, announces a study of trade and transportation. This course will deal with the influence of geographic factors on modes of transportation and trade routes. Regional geographic survey courses offered will concern Middle America, South America, eastern and southern Asia, southwestern Asia and the Soviet Union during 1949-1950.

The department of religion, which offers day and evening classes in the Old and New Testaments, history of religion and philosophy of religions, will offer for the first time a course on the history of the Christian church.

The university is the embodiment of the vision of its namesake, George Washington.

Congress interrupted debate on the Missouri Compromise to vote a charter for the university, first known as Columbian College. It was originally established just north of Florida ave. between 14th and 15th sts. nw. In 1904 Congress changed the name to George Washington University and in 1912 classes were moved to the present site on G st. nw.

By happenstance, the present site is the one George Washington himself had selected.

'Cow College' Now Airborne

A LITTLE over a decade ago, Maryland University at College Park, was a rolling green campus, crisscrossed by a few dirt roads and dotted here and there with a dormitory or classroom building.

Students looking across the fields called the place Lonely Acres or referred to it as a "cow college."

The university still has its green grass, but the campus scarcely is lonely, and the curriculum once predominantly agricultural now covers everything from aeronautics to journalism. A recent addition is a department of philosophy.

Last year 12,459 students attended the university at College Park as compared with 3100 in 1938-1939.

Stately Georgian buildings now line paved winding campus roads.

New College Ready

READY for occupancy this fall is the newly completed Glenn L. Martin College of Engineering and Aeronautical Sciences. Units of the college are a chemical engineering building, laboratory, classroom building and wind tunnel.

Work is underway on additions to two women's dormitories to cost $180,000. On the drawing board are plans for a $1,700,000 chemistry building and a $200,000 women's field house that will include a swimming pool.

Bulldozers have about completed the excavation for the new stadium.

This year Maryland University expects the largest class in its 29-year history. Indications are that 2000 freshmen will enroll during registration September 19 to 23. Classes begin September 26.

Undergraduate colleges and the graduate school are located at College Park. Professional schools of dentistry, law, nursing and pharmacy and the university hospital are in Baltimore.

New Dean

THE LARGEST of the university's divisions, the college of arts and sciences, this year will be under the direction of a new dean, Dr. Leon Perdue Smith, former head of the arts and sciences school at the University of Georgia.

250 Million a Year in College Fees

Equal Chance for All Is Basis of Our Ideal

By Fred J. Kelly
Specialist for Land-grant Colleges and Universities, Federal Security Agency, Office of Education

WHY DO the people of this country put more than 375 million dollars a year into the support of 568 public colleges and universities? Why have philanthropists put more than $1,670,000,000 into endowing 1160 colleges and universities? Why do nearly a fifth of all college-age people in this country give precious years of their lives and 250 million dollars a year in fees besides to attend some college or university?

"All men are created equal." That's one reason. We are trying to take that concept seriously. If we are all equal, then we must all have an equal chance. But the equal chance rests first on the development of each one's talents. If one is capable of being a great musician but has no chance to play the piano when he is young, his equal opportunity is denied him. Happiness, success at its best, can be had only when one has his chance.

The GI Bill

THE people take so seriously this concept of equality of opportunity that when the war deprived young people of their chance to go to school or college, the Congress promptly passed the "GI bill of rights." Under it as many as 1,125,000 veterans at one time have had expenses paid while they have made up lost time.

But there is another reason why we have gone all out for higher education. When Horace Mann argued that universal compulsory education should be adopted, he scarcely mentioned the increased happiness which education would bring to the individuals. The United States had been founded on "liberty and justice for all." That meant universal suffrage. The ballot demanded an informed electorate. So every voter must have the means whereby he may be informed.

But literacy also meant greater efficiency. The communities and States with the best schools and colleges were soon found to be the most productive. They lived better. They spent more, but also saved more. So it began to appear that expenditures for education were in the nature of investments. Good education pays good dividends. This is especially true of technology.

The Dividends

AND when it came to the dividends, the universities came into their own. The Federal Government saw the bearing of colleges of agriculture and mechanic arts on the preservation and development of the country's resources. So the Congress passed the Morrill Act in 1862 which set up the system of land-grant colleges and universities, one in each State. Then in 1887 the Agricultural Experiment Stations as parts of the land grant colleges and universities were established by the Hatch Act. The Johns Hopkins University had been established a little earlier. Research, the magic producer, took the bit in its teeth and began to dominate not only the universities but much of our common lives as well. Now when anything begins to worry or annoy the farmer, the storekeeper, the manufacturer, the politician, a researcher is called in.

And these researchers abide largely in the universities. Furthermore, the universities are engaged in turning out a fresh crop of researchers—4000 Ph.D.'s every year. So the professor is no longer the funny fellow with the long hair or thick glasses. He's the man who has the answer, or knows how to find the answer.

We need wider study and understanding among more people. That's why the colleges are essential. They are partners of the universities. We need colleges—two-year ones and four-year ones, public and private ones—so that the great majority of citizens may be able to attack these issues with intelligence.

Below is the much-photographed rotunda of the University of Virginia. It was designed by Thomas Jefferson

American U. Widens Curriculum, Adds Forty Teachers

MORE than two score new teachers will be on hand this fall when the American University opens with a widely enlarged curriculum.

Included among the more unusual of new courses to be offered is one fashioned by Ambassadors from 21 Latin American countries and Canada who along with university officials have set up a program for Western Hemisphere study.

Other new studies will be offered in the economic aspects of atomic energy, radio and television, business management, geography, music and the sociological aspects of communication.

An important addition is that of a complete law school curriculum.

Dr. Paul F. Douglass, president, announced the new staff appointments and explained the changes in courses in detail last week.

Graduate instruction and research in the sociological aspects of communication will be directed by Dr. Robert T. Bower, who holds degrees from Yale and Columbia Universities. He was formerly with the Bureau of Applied Social Research at Columbia University.

Three new appointments are in the department of music which will adopt a new plan emphasizing performance, and requiring each student of music to practice 15 hours a week. Emerson Meyers, a member of the board of directors of the National Symphony, is to head the division of piano. Richard W. Dirksen, organist at the Washington Cathedral, will teach organ music. Vocal instruction will be given by T. S. Georgi of New York.

Expanded laboratory work in psychology will be directed by Dr. Robert S. Corn, formerly of the University of California. Dr. Charles K. Trueblood, dean of Hillside College, Michigan, will become professor of psychology at the School of Social Sciences and Public Affairs.

Noncredit courses in shorthand, typewriting and office practice will be offered by Mrs. Eloise Magaw, formerly of Katherine Gibbs Schools.

New Chaplain Named

A NEW chaplain was also named, the Rev. Ralph John, formerly a pastor of Foundry Methodist Church. He becomes an associate professor of religion.

A complete law school curriculum is now provided with the addition of the Washington College of Law to the university. It will continue as a liberal, coeducational school.

Three new faculty members are on the teaching staff at the law college. Bryce Rea, former law professor at Mercer University has been appointed assistant professor of law. Two Washington attorneys have been appointed lecturers, Louis P. Haffer, a graduate of Boston University, and Julian R. Wilheim, who holds degrees from New York University and Columbia University.

An expanded program of day-time courses will feature education for business management this fall.

The career program is an outgrowth of reports by special committees of the Society for Advancement of Management. The curriculum equips graduates for positions in 21 months.

Prof. Nathan Baily is director of the course in business and industrial management.

Atomic Energy Studies

THE school is assuming a position of leadership in the studies on the economic aspects of atomic energy. A project of the teaching institute of economics, the program is open to advanced students.

Atomic energy work is headed by Prof. Joseph E. Loftus. Associated with him will be Walter Isard, former researcher at Harvard University, and Samuel H. Schurr, Department of Labor economist and formerly with the University of Chicago.

Walter L. Fowler, District of Columbia budget officer, will teach a new course on the government and administration of Washington. The expanded program directed by Dr. Catheryn Seckler-Hudson, includes "Human Relations in Management."

College's 76th Year

Men Make Up Half Of Wilson's Class

WILSON TEACHERS COLLEGE, 11th and Harvard sts. nw., will open its seventy-sixth year September 12 with a maximum enrollment of 500 full-time students expected.

Registration will be September 12 and 13. Classes for students in the regular curricula will begin Wednesday, September 14.

Freshmen will follow a schedule of orientation activities for the first week, including the administration of the National Freshman Placement Tests and a social program culminating in an all-college picnic sponsored by the Student Council. Classes begin for freshmen September 19.

The college prepares for teaching in the elementary and secondary schools. All curricula are four years in length and lead to the degree of Bachelor of Science. The majority of the graduates accept positions in District schools.

Admission to the college is open to all white high school graduates on a competitive basis. Rank in the graduating class, physical examination, examination in speech and oral interview are included in the process of selection.

This year the selective procedures have been strengthened.

Non-Resident Tuition

APPLICATIONS will be received up to September 9. College offices are open for interviews of applicants daily from 9 a. m. to 4 p. m.

By recent Act of Congress, the $326 non-resident tuition fee is applicable to all students who do not actually reside in the District. There is no tuition fee for residents of the District. The college also admits a number of transfer students from other colleges who wish to prepare for teaching.

Last year, approximately as many men as women were admitted to the college. It is expected that about half the freshmen this year will be men.

Recent appointments to the faculty include Philip S. Fox as new head of the Department of Physical Education for men. He replaces Dr. G. Harris White, who retired last year. Fox has been prominent in high school coaching of basketball and football. An expanded program of men's athletics is expected this year.

Miss Lucie Petta will be temporarily transferred from Anacostia High School to assist in the physical education program for women.

New Nurses' Head

THE nursing education program will continue with Garfield Memorial Hospital participating. Miss Meredith J. Mitchell has been appointed to conduct the science courses for nurses. Miss Mitchell has had several years' experience at Northwestern University and the Northwestern Hospital School of Nursing at the University of Minnesota.

Golden Jubilee in March

The Livingstone Academy of instructive costume design and millinery, completing its forty-ninth year in Washington, will celebrate its golden jubilee in March.

Under the supervision of Mrs. Jessica Livingstone Dickinson, owner and director, the school at 1138 Connecticut ave. nw., has expanded its facilities for the coming term, adding new teachers and enlarged classrooms.

Regular courses offered by the school stress practical business and personal courses in costume design, draping, garment construction, tailoring and millinery. Pattern cutting is taught by new French dresscutting machines.

Both day and evening classes are offered in the eight-months course.

New Administration Building Planned at Randolph-Macon

The chapel at Randolph-Macon

ASHLAND, VA., Aug. 27.—Randolph - Macon College this fall will launch a building program that will add a central administration building and two new classroom buildings to the campus.

Administrative offices and an auditorium seating 1000 will be housed in the new central building, tentatively named Blackwell Hall. New buildings for the teaching of science and social studies also are to be erected.

The college, supported by the Virginia Methodist Conference, is the oldest Methodist college in America. It will begin its 118th session September 13.

Located 15 miles north of Richmond and 85 south of Washington in the half-commuter, half rural town of Ashland, the college draws its students primarily from Virginia, the District and Maryland.

By tradition, college enrollment is small. This year's enrollment of 547 men will be one of the largest in its history.

Randolph-Macon Woman's College Expects to Enroll 630

LYNCHBURG, VA., Aug. 27.—Randolph - Macon Woman's College will open September 13 with orientation for new students. Matriculation for the entire student body will be September 16. Total enrollment for the 1949-1950 session is expected to be 630.

Curriculum at Randolph-Macon includes courses in 25 subjects with 20 fields from which the student can choose a major.

Randolph-Macon was the first college for women to be admitted to membership in the Southern Association of Colleges and Secondary Schools. It had the first chapter of Phi Beta Kappa granted to a Southern college for women.

The chemistry department is accredited by the American Chemical Society and is doing research in the field of pure chemistry for the Office of Naval Research. The psychology department was one of the first to be established in this country.

A nursery school is operated by the college to provide an opportunity for students to study the growth and behavior of children and to assist in their care.

Included in the usual social life of the college are the activities of the 10 national social sororities and the independent girls' house. All sorority groups have small lodges in The Pines on the back campus.

Method Perfected in Nazi Trials

G. U. Will Listen to Many Tongues

METHODS used at the Nuernberg trials and at meetings of the United Nations in providing simultaneous interpretation of a number of languages will be employed in teaching at Georgetown University's new Institute of Languages and Linguistics.

With the opening of the institute this fall at downtown headquarters, 1717 Massachusetts ave. nw., the university will become the first school in this country to offer courses leading to the degree of bachelor of science in languages.

Just as the university's foreign service school pioneered 30 years ago in preparing men and women for the diplomatic and consular service, the institute aims at a new role in training for careers in the field of foreign languages.

Graduates of the school will be qualified for interpreting posts at international conferences, translating and language editing, as well as for jobs offered in the increasing number of international organizations and agencies.

Starts in October

REGISTRATION for the various schools of the university begins early next month, with classes scheduled to get under way the first of October.

The Very Rev. Hunter Guthrie, S. J., former dean of the graduate school, will begin his first academic term as president of the 150 year-old university.

He is pledged to continue the school's policy frequently referred to as a "progressive conservatism."

Assisting him will be two new deans, the Rev. Gerard F. Yates, S.J., of the graduate school, and the Rev. Edward A. Jacklin, S.J., of the college of arts and sciences.

Six thousand students, topping last year's record enrollment, are expected this year. Since the war the university, whose main buildings are located atop Georgetown hill, has doubled classroom facilities to take care of the increasing number of students.

Limited Enrollment

ENROLLMENT at the new school of Languages and Linguistics will be limited to 200 students at a ratio of 10 students per faculty member when the school is fully established.

Faculty drawn primarily from foreign countries will be under the direction of Professor Leon Dostert, interpreter for General Eisenhower during the war and liaison officer to General Henri Giraud in North Africa. He was in charge of languages at the first Nuernberg trials and later set up the program of simultaneous interpretation at the United Nations.

The institute, a division of the Georgetown University School of Foreign Service, will be under the supervision of the Rev. Edmund A. Walsh, S.J., who founded the foreign service school and still is its regent.

In addition to offering training in languages the institute will compile and publish specialized glossaries of terms used in international scientific and technical fields. A division of methodology will develop new techniques for language instruction.

30 Hours a Week

ORDINARILY college students study languages in hour-long classes three times a week. Intensified language training methods developed by the Army will be employed at the institute with 30 hours of training each week.

Laboratories with apparatus for sumultaneous interpretation will be set up in the institute and permit holding of multilingual seminars and discussion groups.

Advanced students will take correlated courses in geography, history, civilization and contemporary conditions and problems in the language under study.

Admission to the institute generally will be limited to students with two years of specialized college training.

It will take three years to earn a degree, two years at the institute and one abroad. The university is negotiating an exchange program with foreign countries.

Named vice director of the institute is Prof. Jean Deny, grammarian and specialist in Turkish and Middle Eastern languages. He is former administrator of the Ecole Nationale des Langues Orientales Vivantes in Paris and will be in charge of the division of linguistics and participate in the teaching program.

'Sesqui' Year Is Ending at Visitation

Two students of Visitation Convent

THE oldest Catholic boarding school for girls in the thirteen original colonies is preparing for its one-hundred fifty-first year.

Older than the city of Washington itself, Georgetown Visitation Convent has occupied its present site on 35th st. since its establishment in 1799.

On September 12 and 13, junior college day and resident students, respectively, will report for registration. Enrollment for 1949-50 numbers 136. On September 14, the 191 enrolled preparatory school students will register. In each department a faculty of 20 or more instructors, religious and lay, insures relatively small classes.

The school's forty-acre campus, laid out in terraced gardens, walks and athletic fields, provides an abundance of outdoor life. Field hockey, archery, tennis, softball and baseball claim many adherents in the fall and spring. Within the modernly equipped gymnasium, the sports program is amplified by basketball, badminton, ping pong, volleyball, and shuffleboard.

Throughout 1949, the sesquicentennial celebration has been the keynote of all the convent's activities. As the anniversary year was ushered in with a pageant by the junior college students, so 1949 will come to an official close with another original presentation, put on by the students of the preparatory school under the direction of Miss Caroline McKinley.

Tests Tough At School for Secretaries

STUDENTS must prove they are qualified for secretarial work before they are admitted to the Washington School for Secretaries.

Prospective students are required to take entrance and aptitude tests. Those who pass are given a month's trial before they are admitted.

Mrs. Adria Lynham, director, believes that careful selection of students has been one of the factors in the school's enviable position of having demand for graduates exceed supply.

Another is the course of instruction, which limits subjects to those that have a direct bearing on earning ability.

The school, with offices in the National Press Building, gives correlated courses presenting subject matter in groups of office duties rather than by isolated subjects.

Curriculum changes this year include introduction of courses in simplified Gregg shorthand, and revision of the course in business ownership and organization to give students greater appreciation of the over-all operation of business.

The student's progress in the school is self-regulated. Credit is earned as work is completed and promotion is based on accomplishment.

New Building At Webster

A NEW $215,000 building, housing a theater, science laboratory, radio and television studio and living quarters for 68 students is now under construction on the campus of Marjorie Webster Junior College.

The building, of Spanish design, will be ready for occupancy in the spring.

Its added facilities will make it possible for the school to accommodate additional resident and day students.

When the college opens September 28 for the fall term, 185 resident students and 50 day students will be in attendance.

The school, founded 30 years ago by Miss Marjorie Fraser Webster on Massachusetts ave. at Thomas circle nw., now occupies a 14-acre estate at 47th st. and Kalmia rd. nw.

Radio station routine, microphone technique, use of recording equipment and production methods will be taught in the radio and television studio, which will have all of the equipment and facilities of a regular studio.

C. C. Junior College Adds 3 Teachers, 1 Building

ADDITION of three new faculty members plus a new building to house science and technical departments will mark opening of the 1949-50 school year at Chevy Chase Junior College.

The institution is located at 6410 Connecticut ave., in Chevy Chase, Md., north of Chevy Chase Circle.

The new faculty members are Miss Phyllis J. Link of Parker, Va., teacher of physical education, who recently graduated from Mary Washington College of the University of Virginia; Mrs. Cora Mae Chesnut of Spokane, Wash., teacher of psychology, sociology and hygiene, and Jose Garcia-Tunon, now of Washington, formerly of Havana, Cuba, teacher of Spanish. He is a graduate of universities in Havana and Barcelona, Spain.

The new structure to be opened with this school year is named for Dr. Effa Funk Muhse, who retired in June, 1948, after teaching science for 21 years at the Chevy Chase Junior College.

Muhse Hall will house a biology laboratory, chemistry laboratory and the home economics department. The latter department includes a foods laboratory, sewing laboratory and practice dining room. In addition, remodeling has doubled the size of the art studio and secretarial science department of the college.

The new facilities will permit enlargement of the student body to approximately 90 boarding students and 40 day students, according to Frances R. Brown, president.

The college offers regular academic work of the first two years of college in a liberal arts program. In addition, its general program is designed for students who wish to explore both academic and vocational fields and allows electives in studio art, home economics and secretarial science.

Registration dates are September 20 to 22, inclusive, and classes will open on September 23.

Ben Franklin Expects 1500

BENJAMIN Franklin University, established 43 years ago, offers courses in accountancy and financial administration leading to degrees of bachelor and master of commercial science.

The university, located in two buildings at 16th and L sts. nw. and 17th and H sts. nw., has a faculty of 58 full and part-time instructors drawn from fields of accountancy, taxation and law. Enrollment this semester is expected to reach 1500 students.

Classes this fall start September 12 in the evening school and September 28 in the day school. It takes two years to receive a degree in the day school and three in the evening school.

Football Jumping Gun At William and Mary

WILLIAMSBURG, Va., Aug. 27.—America's second oldest institution of higher learning, the College of William and Mary, opens its ancient doors for the 257th time this year to greet some 2000 modern collegians.

This historic school, whose halls have echoed the footsteps of six Presidents of the United States, will begin registration September 22, following a three-day freshman orientation program. Classes begin September 26.

Even before that date, college life will have burst forth on the gridiron, for the William and Mary Indians open their football season September 17 with the rising Southwestern power, the University of Houston. And, as more than 500 freshmen eye their impressive array of textbooks on September 24, the football team tackles the University of Pittsburgh.

This fall will be the first for most colleges to note a large decline in enrollment of GI students. There has been a gradual tapering off over the past two years, but this September will show a marked decrease. However, some 400 former servicemen will still be carried on the William and Mary roster for the fall semester.

September, 1949, will see a new face behind the desk marked dean of the college. Dr. Sharvey Umbeck, who departed from William and Mary to assume new responsibilities as president of Knox College, has been replaced by Dr. Nelson Marshall, former head of the Virginia Fisheries Laboratory and one of the foremost biologists in the East.

William and Mary is planning a new dormitory to house 300 male students. Upon its completion, a new academic building will be constructed, at which time the historic Sir Christopher Wren building, the oldest academic structure in the country, will be converted to a museum. Following this, a new student union building is planned, as well as a new power plant.

Not all college life consists of books and study. William and Mary has scheduled homecoming for the weekend of October 7 and 8, at which time old collegemates and young will find time and facilities for a rousing get-together.

'Triplespeed' Shorthand Taught at Capital City

DEMAND for an alphabetical shorthand that could be learned in a few months led two teachers, Drs. W. L. and M. M. Newsom, to develop a system they call "Triplespeed, the NUABC Shorthand."

The system now is taught at the Capital City College, 1101 Vermont ave. nw., where Dr. W. L. Newsom is president.

A simplified method of increasing writing speed to more than three times longhand, the system uses the dominant consonants of a word, long vowels, a few short vowels, standard abbreviations, and five punctuation marks for a code.

Dr. W. L. Newsom says alphabetical shorthand no longer can be considered an experiment, since more than 100,000 alphabetical shorthand writers are now employed in the Government and private offices.

A student can learn the triplespeed method in six to eight weeks with an hour's instruction a day, Dr. Newsom said.

Freshmen to Live on Campus

Lehigh University freshmen who will enter the university this fall will have no housing problem. All out-of-town freshmen to be enrolled September 22 will be required to live in campus dormitories during their first year, Dr. Wray H. Congdon, dean of students, announced yesterday.

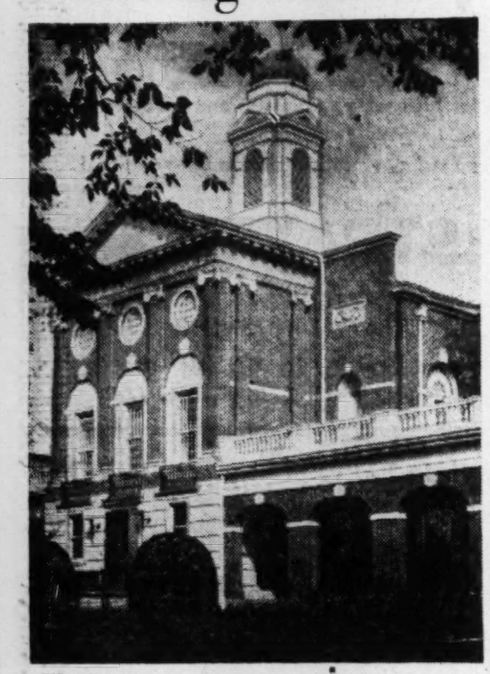
Student Exchanges Help

Sweet Briar Strong On Foreign Affairs



The Refectory at Sweet Briar College is connected with four dormitories by brick arcades

WHEN President Martha B. Lucas officially opens the forty-fourth academic session at Sweet Briar College September 23, she will greet a student body of approximately 450 girls from many parts of this country and from 10 foreign lands.

On the site of the nineteenth century plantation which gave the college its name, students will find a pervading interest in international affairs, in the promotion of international understanding through the exchange of students.

Among the students from foreign lands, are scholarship holders from France, Germany and China. Four Sweet Briar juniors will be studying at the University of Paris in the group of 71 men and women from this country enrolled in the Sweet-Briar-sponsored junior year in France. Two others will attend the University of St. Andrews in Scotland under a special arrangement in effect between the two institutions since 1932.

Throughout its history, Sweet Briar has maintained its liberal arts curriculum. Within this framework, students also pursue specialized courses in their last two years.

Recently the greatest number have majored in one of the social sciences. A stimulus in this direction is Sweet Briar's only endowed professorship, the Carter Glass Chair of Government. Dr. Edgar J. Fisher, formerly assistant director of the Institute of International Education in New York and for many years dean and professor of political science at Robert College in Istanbul, Turkey, was recently appointed to this chair.

Last year saw the introduction of courses in Russian and Russian literature.

In keeping with the interest in world affairs, the International Relations Club is one of the liveliest student organizations. The Glee Club and various other clubs share the students' favor. Sweet Briar has never had sororities.

Although it has always been a nondenominational college, Sweet Briar places strong emphasis on the religious and spiritual side of life.

Hockey, riding, swimming in the college lake, and tennis are favored sports, and there is great enthusiasm for dancing. A new recreation building, opened last year, and an outing cabin on a nearby mountain provide pleasant spots for relaxing.

Students write and edit three publications and design and make scenery and costumes for dramatic productions under the guidance of a professional director.

Large numbers of young men give Sweet Briar, the weekend appearance of a coeducational campus, and it is no longer unusual to find dates attending classes.

Tuition Up, Courses Added

Washington-Lee Enters 3rd Century

LEXINGTON, VA., Aug. 27.—Changes in curriculum requirements, a $100 tuition increase accompanied by an expanded scholarship aid program, and the introduction of the South's first course in American studies, will highlight the beginning of Washington and Lee University's third century this fall.

The 201st term of the Nation's sixth oldest university will open when 1250 men start classes here September 23.

Most of the curriculum changes will affect only upperclassmen. Offered for the first time is an "independent work" major in the liberal arts.

After two years' work in fundamental courses the upperclassmen may proceed toward the degree without concentrating on the traditional departmental "major" subject. The student will be allowed, if his academic record warrants, the privilege of proposing his own work program.

A course in integration and synthesis to be taken in the senior year by all candidates for the Bachelor of Arts degree will be introduced to tie together the materials of the 30-odd courses the student will have taken in his four years of undergraduate work.

From neighboring Roanoke College, where he has served as dean, will come Dr. Edward D. Myers to handle two of the four new courses in integration. Dr. Marshall W. Fishwick, now at Yale, will join the faculty in September to present the initial courses in American studies.

A senior integrative course entitled "American Thought and Civilization" will be introduced by Professor Fishwick to lend unity to work—now segregated in departments—in literature, history, the social sciences, philosophy and the arts, all of it dealing with American life and ideas.

Painting Course

EXPANSION in fine arts brings to the university Dr. Marion Junkin, Virginia painter and alumnus of Washington and Lee.

To balance an increase in tuition (now $450 a year) necessitated by rising operational costs, the university has made available an additional 40 new "Third Century Scholarships" ranging in value from $900 to $3500 each.

President Francis P. Gaines said most of the new scholarships were made possible through funds raised during the university's bicentennial financial program which boosted the university's endowment by nearly $1,750,000 since the war.

The university now has available more than 100 permanently endowed and departmental scholarships for needy students and prospective freshmen, to be awarded on a competitive basis.

Gets Rockefeller Grant

The University of Notre Dame has received a grant of $69,000 from the Rockefeller Foundation in New York to aid in the development of a project to further the study of international relations at the university, it was announced last week by the Rev. John J. Cavanaugh, C. S. C., president of Notre Dame.

Prize Class Enrolled

The University of Illinois College of Medicine reports that the scholastic averages of 166 students who have been selected for enrollment next month are the highest of any class in the school's 62-year history. Examiner and Recorder George R. Moon reports that almost all of the first-year students have scholastic records of 88 per cent or above for the three years of premedical studies.

State Dept. Men Teach Foreign Affairs

THE School of Advanced International Studies is a unique educational venture in training men for careers in foreign relations fields.

A graduate school with offices at 1906 Florida ave. nw., it will open its sixth session September 30.

Sponsored by the Foreign Service Educational Foundation, a nonprofit District corporation, and under the direction of Dean Philip W. Thayer, the school offers advanced courses in diplomatic history, international law, international economics, and United States foreign relations.

A special feature of the curriculum is the opportunity provided students for intensive area studies in Latin American affairs, Middle Eastern affairs, Far Eastern affairs and contemporary Europe.

Intermediate and advanced language instruction is offered in French, German, Spanish, Italian, Portugese, Russian and Arabic.

Mary Baldwin Adds to Staff

STAUNTON, VA., Aug. 27.—Mary Baldwin College will open its 108th annual session September 14.

All new students will be expected to register on that day. Returning students will register September 15 and 16.

An orientation program for new students will be offered and classes will begin September 17. Approximately 300 students will be enrolled. The college offers work in each of 14 fields.

The teaching faculty includes 35 members. Among the new additions is Gordon C. Page, who this year directed the 400-voice chorus of the Virginia music festival, and who becomes associate professor of music.

Miss Mary Moore Pancake, until recently acting director of public relations at Sweet Briar College, has been named director of publicity.

Among the students will be Miss Inari, a DP student from Estonia. Miss Inari's father was a university professor in Estonia and is now teaching in Germany. The college has provided her a scholarship covering her room, board, tuition, and the students have collected funds for her travel, vacation and incidental expenses.

Towered Gothic entrance to Duke University Medical School. A thousand freshmen are due in Durham, N. C., on September 17 and 4100 upperclassmen by September 27. One new feature of the campus this year is the beautiful Morehead Planetarium and Art Gallery, valued at three million dollars

Duke to Register 5100, Install New President

DURHAM, N. C., Aug. 27.—Preparations are under way to accommodate another capacity enrollment at Duke this year with 5100 students expected to register.

Classes begin September 22, and just one month later, October 21-23, the campus will be host to one of the most illustrious gatherings in its history when Duke's new president, Dr. Hollis Edens, is formally inaugurated.

Last year there were 4399 applications from students for some 862 places in the men's and women's freshman classes.

Priority, however, is still given Southerners; more than 60 per cent of Duke's students are from the South.

Despite capacity enrollments, previous high standards of instruction prevail. Classes average 25 students, and there is 1 faculty member for every 7 students.

Beginning September 15, a freshman class of approximately 1000 men and women, will arrive to begin a seven-day orientation program.

Special assemblies and open houses are planned during their first week, much of which is occupied with placement tests in various fields of college preparation.

New upperclassmen at Duke will register Monday and Tuesday, September 19-20, and on Wednesday, September 21, formal opening ceremonies will be held.

Homecoming for Duke alumni has been set for the Inaugural Weekend to permit large scale alumni participation in the installation of Dr. Edens.

Steadily Expanding

RELATIVELY young, Duke is continuing to grow and expand. Last year a new engineering building, costing one million dollars, was completed and occupied. A new physics building was completed this summer.

The Duke University library, largest in the entire South, has been enlarged with a new wing. Duke has the only library in the South with a million or more volumes.

Recent occupation of an entire building by the department of art, aesthetics and music reflects an expanding interest and new emphasis in the fine arts. A student symphony orchestra, concert band, chamber music groups as well as the nationally-known Duke Chapel Choir and Glee Club are steadily expanding.

In the division of graphic arts, new equipment has been added and three new courses included.

Just completed is an addition to the new medical research building.

Duke's famed faculty consistently produces research achievements in every field. Under the University's research council alone, more than 1000 scholarly and scientific publications have appeared.

The graduate school of forestry is the only one in the South offering higher level work. It operates in conjunction with the 7500 acre Duke Forest, a mammoth laboratory for experimental work.

The Duke law school has the largest legal library in the South. The school's legal aid clinic has handled over 7000 cases since 1931, providing a unique service to the local area as well as practical training for students.

Last year there were 2000 applications for the 76 openings in the medical school. Over 360,000 patients have been examined, diagnosed and treated in 19 years of operation at Duke Hospital. The hospital has a capacity of 604 inpatients and additional facilities for 600 ambulatory and clinical patients.

The divinity school, summer school, graduate school of arts and sciences, trinity colege, the college of engineering, the School of Nursing, and several allied professional schools make up the complement of Duke's graduate and undergraduate bodies.

62 Pct. of Students At VPI Will Be GIs

BLACKSBURG, VA., Aug. 27.—Virginia Tech, the land grant college of the Old Dominion, offers instruction in engineering, agriculture, applied sciences and business administration.

New students report for an orientation period September 21. Former students register September 23 and classes begin September 26. Approximately 4600 students are expected, some 400 less than last year's record enrollment.

More than 60 per cent of the VPI students are enrolled in the school of engineering, which offers four-year curricula leading to the B. S. degree, in aeronautics, agriculture, architecture, ceramics, chemistry, civil, electrical, industrial, mechanical, metallurgical and mining engineering, geology and light building construction.

The next largest group of students are enrolled in business administration, biology, chemistry, general science, industrial arts education, industrial physics, and statistics.

Curricula offered in the school of agriculture include agricultural economics, agricultural education, agronomy, animal husbandry, dairy husbandry, forestry and wildlife conservation, general agriculture, home economics, horticulture, poultry husbandry and rural sociology.

In all of these subjects, graduate instruction leading to the M. S. degree is offered. In certain of the departments, the Ph.D degree also is conferred.

VPI's Corps of Cadets, which this year will number about 1650, is gradually growing back to its prewar enrollment of 2600.

GIs are expected to compose about 62 per cent of the coming session's student body. Even 12 per cent of the new students, according to the admissions office, will be GIs.

VPI coeducational since 1921, has about 150 women students.

Construction of three four-story brick dormitories to house 700 cadets is expected to be completed by the beginning of the winter quarter. Until then, the college will continue to use dormitories and classrooms at the former Radford Ordnance Works, 8 miles from here.

Three additional agricultural units are now under construction. Contracts soon will be let for greenhouses, a mechanical engineering laboratory and an addition to the infirmary.

VPI is headquarters in Virginia for the Agricultural Extension Service. Farm and home demonstration agents and Agricultural Experiment Station scientists work closely with the agricultural faculty and often teach part-time.

Adventists Have Chance to Study and Work

WITH an anticipated student body of 750 from more than 20 States, the Washington Missionary College of the Seventh Day Adventist Church at Takoma Park will open classes September 15.

The liberal arts institution offers an opportunity for the majority of its students to work at jobs in the college or its allied enterprises in Takoma Park.

An extensive construction program is under way to enlarge facilities. An addition to the science building and a radio-music building are now under construction and a new gymnasium will be started shortly.

Within the past year, Halcyon Hall, a new dormitory housing 175 girls, was completed on Flower ave. It includes an assembly room, playroom, laundry rooms, and a kitchen.

Registration will take place September 12 to 14, upper class registrants on the first two days, and freshmen on the last day.

The college offers courses in education, philosophy religion, economics, history, political science, sociology, biology, chemistry, mathematics, nursing education, physics, ancient and modern languages, English, speech, business administration, secretarial science, household arts, music and physical education.

Ten new instructors will open classes joining 55 other faculty members.

National U. In 81st Year

NATIONAL UNIVERSITY SCHOOL OF LAW, founded in 1869, is the second oldest law school in Washington. It begins its eighty-first year with registration of all students September 19-23. Classes commence September 26.

The school, which is coeducational, is expecting a banner enrollment of 300 students this year. Located at 1225 New York ave. nw., the school is in the heart of the business and governmental district of the city.

The four-year undergraduate program includes regular fall and spring semesters. A summer session is available for students who desire to shorten the regular course. All classes are taught in the evenings between 6:30 p. m. and 8:40 p. m., Monday through Friday.

In addition to the bachelor of laws degree, courses are available in graduate work which lead to the degrees of master of laws and master of patent law. Candidates for these graduate degrees must have the degree of LL.B or J.D. from a law school of approved standing.

Mentors Practice What They Preach

SOUTHEASTERN University courses are aimed at helping the employed student improve his job opportunities.

The school, which has offices in the YMCA at 1736 G st. nw., gives practical courses in accountancy, law, business and salesmanship.

Accounting instructors are certified and practicing accountants. Teachers of business law are members of the bar and instructors in business administration are practicing businessmen. Salesmanship lectures are sales managers and members of the Washington Sales Executive Club.

Fall classes begin September 15. Registration is now under way.

Vast Building Plan at Howard U.

UNPRECEDENTED enrollment at Howard University during the past few years has necessitated reorganization of the administrative setup as well as intensified the need for a burgeoning construction program.

Three new important university posts have been created. Dr. William Stuart Nelson, former dean of the school of religion, has been named dean of the university. George L. Washington, former administrative assistant to the president of Tuskegee Institute, has been appointed business manager.

The third post, director of public relations, is being temporarily filled by Dr. James M. Nabrit, jr., secretary of the university.

Dr. Frank Wilson, former dean of students at Lincoln University, Pa., has replaced Dr. Nelson as deal of the school of religion, and Dr. Armour J. Blackburn, director of student affairs, has been appointed dean of students.

Although a slight decrease in enrollment is anticipated this fall, Howard University again expects enrollment to exceed 6000 students.

As to the vast building program authorized by Congress, work has already begun on two new women's dormitories.

New Buildings Planned

CONSTRUCTION of the new engineering and architecture building is expected to begin this fall. Work on the new law and biology buildings is slated to get under way next winter.

Congress has also appropriated money for construction of a new dental school building, an auditorium and fine arts structure, an administration building and three men's dormitories.

Postwar readjustment has necessitated some increases in tuition fees in several schools and colleges at Howard, Dr. Nabrit announced.

He also reported changes in dates for opening of several schools and colleges. Registration for law school will be held September 13; for the medical school, September 27; for dental school, September 29. Registration for new students in all other schools and colleges will be on September 30.

C. U. Expects Largest Enrollment

CATHOLIC UNIVERSITY, anticipating the largest enrollment in history, will begin its sixty-first academic year September 29, when undergraduate classes begin in all schools.

Preparations are made to enroll 4700 students, of whom 1900 will be veterans, in the 10 schools of the university. Registration for new and freshman students will be September 23 and 24. Undergraduate students will register September 26 to 28 and graduate students from September 29 to October 4.

More than 1000 students are expected to enter the School of Engineering and Architecture, a heavy favorite in past years. This year an additional 120 students will receive engineering courses in the branch school maintained at the Fort Belvoir (Va.) Army Engineer Center.

To care for the increased enrollment, 40 new instructors have been added to the faculty and additional classrooms, laboratory facilities and dormitory space has been provided.

Additional construction estimated to cost $1,250,000 is under way but will not be completed before the second semester.

This includes a building for the National Catholic School of Social Service, a dormitory to accommodate 100 women students and a chapel with a seating capacity of 460.

A new addition is the department of archives and manuscripts, housed in Mullen Library. Headed by the Rev. Henry J. Browne, it will have charge of the official records of the university and of any special collections of historical manuscripts which may be donated.

A university counseling center also has been established, with Roger F. Moran as director.

A physical education program has been set up with the accent on swimming. No freshman student can receive credit in physical education without learing to swim.

8 New Dorms At Virginia U.

Accommodations for nearly 1000 students will be provided in a group of eight new dormitories to be built at a cost of $1,500,000.

Bids are soon to be asked for a new academic classroom building which will cost about one million dollars and for an addition to Thornton Hall, the Engineering Building, to cost $250,000.

Clark Hall, the law school building, is being enlarged to provide more library space, seminar rooms and faculty offices, at a cost of $200,000. Also now under construction is an addition to the hospital costing $150,000 for cancer treatment, research and teaching, an addition to the interns' quarters costing $154,000, a printing plant costing $100,000, and a building for the Virginia Geological Survey costing $60,000 which will free space in the present geology building for more classroom and laboratory facilities.

In the planning stage are a combined student activities building and dining hall to cost about $1,250,000, and a building for the teaching of advanced physics to cost more than $600,000.

New Faces

NEW members of the faculty already number more than 20, and several additions may be added when the board of visitors meets September 9.

John F. Gange, who will become head of the Woodrow Wilson School of Foreign Affairs, recently resigned from the Economic Cooperation Administration, where he was executive of the central secretariat.

Donald R. Richberg, general counsel for the National Recovery Administration during the first term of President Roosevelt, is joining the law faculty, and will teach courses and conduct seminars on the constitution and constitutional law.

Charles O. Gregory, authority on the law of labor relations, joins the law faculty from the University of Chicago, where he was professor of law. He formerly was solicitor for the Department of Labor.

Courses in sculpture are being added in the McIntire School of Fine Arts under Leslie Johnson, new assistant professor of art, who comes from Indiana University. He won the 1947 garden sculpture prize of the Pennsylvania Academy and the Goodman sculpture prize of the Herron Art Museum in Indianapolis.

County College Is Booming

'Monty, Jr.,' a Postwar Baby

MONTGOMERY JUNIOR COLLEGE, started as an experiment and an expedient, now is a permanent fixture of the Montgomery County school system.

The college was born in the postwar years to provide schooling for Montgomery County residents when GI-swollen enrollments crowded students out of regular colleges.

Organized three years ago with 185 students, the college expects more than 500 when classes start September 19.

Increased appropriations this year from the State of Maryland and from the county have made it possible for the school to cut tuition for county residents from $200 to $100 a year. Fees for Maryland residents outside the county also have been reduced from $350 to $200 a year.

The college is located on the campus of the Bethesda-Chevy Chase High School on East-West hwy. While it has its own temporary office and laboratory building, it also uses the facilities of the high school after 4 p. m.

Orientation for new students is scheduled for the week beginning September 12, with registration for old students on September 16 and for new students September 17.

The college enrolls transfer, terminal and special students. The transfer students who intend to secure the associate-in-arts degree and then enter the junior year of some four-year college have two new curricula to select from this year. They are preeducation and prephysical education.

As usual, curricula in premedical, prelegal, preengineering, predental, prenursing, prebusiness administration and liberal arts and science will be available. A new terminal curriculum in art or music will be offered.

Other terminal curricula offered for a complete two-year program are general education, drafting, general business management, medical technology, medical secretarial and secretarial.

Special students who are not working toward degrees may enroll in the college. Tuition rates for these part-time students, who pay by the semester hour, also have been reduced for county and State residents.

With Miss Sadie Higgins as the newly appointed director of student personnel services, the college is enlarging its guidance program. Miss Harriet Preble, formerly of Bennett Junior College in New York and Holton-Arms in Washington, will come to the college to head the secreterial department.

Two other new instructors are Harvey J. Cheston, who will teach mathematics, and Mrs. Mary Anderson Holberg, who will teach English.

The American Association of University Professors this summer admitted the members of the junior college faculty to membership. All of Montgomery Junior College transfer courses are accepted at full value at the University of Maryland, and in addition, the college is fully accredited by the Maryland State Department of Education.

Gallaudet a Reservoir Of Teachers of Deaf

GALLAUDET COLLEGE, 7th st. and Florida ave. ne., is the only college in the world devoted to providing a liberal arts program for the deaf.

Students whose hearing loss is so great that they cannot succeed in colleges for hearing students are eligible for admission. A limited number of hearing students training to teach the deaf also are admitted.

The eighty-sixth session will open September 14 with registration of new students. Others will register Sep-

This year's capacity enrollment will be drawn from 40 States, Canada and the District.

The cirriculum of the college is similar to that of any other American college which offers four years of work toward a bachelor's degree. Many graduates go into the teaching profession in the various schools for the deaf.

A central point in the college program is the emphasis placed on the individual needs of each student. In this process of individual guidance, use is made of a series of education, personality and differential aptitude tests.

The physical education program stresses personal and community hygiene, intramural athletics and intercollegiate competition. The college is a member of the Mason-Dixon Conference. Competition includes baseball, football, basketball, wrestling, cross-country and track.

The teacher training department is open to graduates of accredited colleges. A large proportion of the superintendents of State schools for the deaf are men who took their training in this department.

Long-Awaited Swimming Pool Is Ready at Hood

FREDERICK, MD., Aug. 27.—The 500 women students of Hood College will arrive at this Monocacy Valley city September 18 for the opening of the fifty-seventh academic year.

Students from 21 States and three foreign countries will participate in Freshman Week. Registration for all students will begin September 19.

Class meetings will be held, placement examinations given, and orientation lectures will familiarize the new girls with Hood traditions and procedures. President Katherine Elizabeth McBride of Bryn Mawr College will deliver the convocation address.

Returning students will find the new Gambrill Gymnasium completed and the long-awaited swimming pool filled. The new building also has a theater, date room with snack bar and offices for extracurricular organizations.

New appointments to the staff and faculty include Herbert N. Heston, assistant to the president; Miss Katherine Sherrill, formerly dean of women of Mary Baldwin College, assistant director of personnel; Dr. Earle Blakeslee who has just completed his doctor of sacred music degree at Union Seminary, head of the music department; Dr. Andrew Meyer, of the University of Chicago, chairman of the English department; Dr. Eleinor Ware, a Yale graduate, head of the new department of physical sciences, and Dr. Evelyn Mudge, formerly of Western Maryland College, head of the department of education.

In addition to conferring the degrees of bachelor of arts and B. S. in home economics, Hood, in cooperation with Massachusetts General Hospital, grants the degree of bachelor of science in nursing to a selected group of students.

Four Trinity Girls to Spend Year in Paris

FOUR students of Trinity College will spend the coming school year in France attending the Catholic University of Paris or the Sorbonne as members of the Paris Study Group.

The four girls, juniors at the college, will return to Trinity in the fall of 1950 to complete their senior year.

Study abroad is part of the modern language program at the college.

A completely equipped modern language studio also will be added to the department this year.

The college will open its fiftieth scholastic year September 17 when 140 students will register for their freshmen year and begin a three-day orientation program. Former students will register September 20 before the opening convocation at 3:30 p. m. Classes resume September 21.

Four-hundred and eighty-five students from 27 States, the District and six foreign countries will attend the college this year. Among the foreign group will be a "displaced" student from Lithuania attending on a scholarship.

Lays Groundwork For Nursing B. S.

MARY Washington College in Fredericksburg enters its 6th year as the woman's college of the University of Virginia the week of September 19, when some 1500 students are scheduled to enroll.

Dr. Morgan L. Combs, president since 1929, has announced a new course offered in conjunction with the University of Virginia leading to the degree of Bachelor of Science in Nursing. Two years will be spent at Mary Washington and two summer courses at the University of Virginia Hospital. Two and a half years will follow at the university at Charlottesville.

The campus, containing 365 acres, formerly part of the Betty Washington Lewis estate, extends for nearly a mile along a height of land overlooking Fredericksburg. In this historic setting, less than 60 miles from Washington to the north and Richmond to the south, the Old Dominion offers women the same liberal arts education as given at the university, 70 miles to the west in Charlottesville.

"It is difficult to measure the value derived from NAOB. Factors that contributed to my radio career were the literature made available to me, use of proper facilities, studios, classrooms, equipment, competent instructors, presentation of 15-minute scripts, produced, directed and played by students, and most important, the purpose for which I think the school stands—good clean, American Radio."

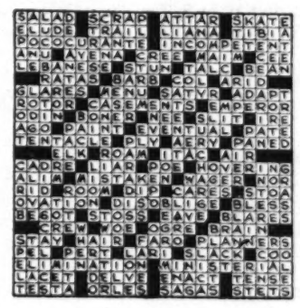
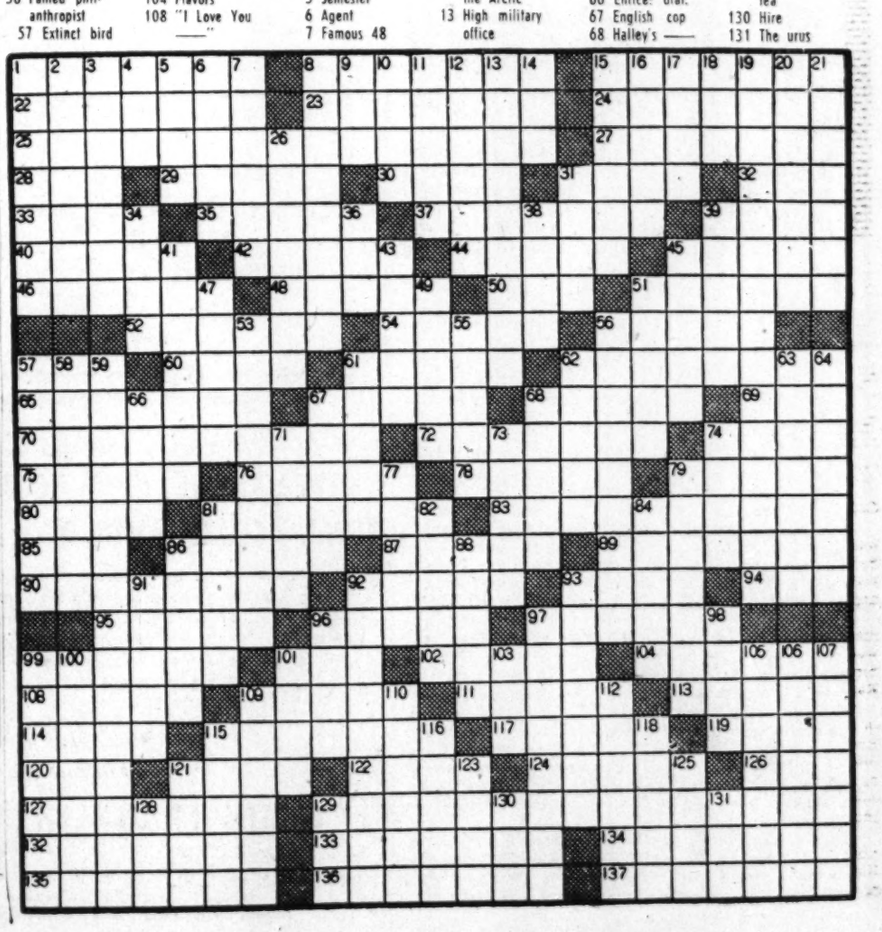
Solution to Last Week's Puzzle





The Real Villain In 'Oliver Twist' Is Man's Poverty

By Richard L. Coe

WHILE IN LONDON recently, I asked the J. Arthur Rank organization to show me the film version of "Oliver Twist."

Made by Ronald Neame and David Lean, who gave us the memorable "Great Expectations," this picture has been kept from American audiences by a bitter pressure campaign.

It had been alleged that this was an anti-Semitic film and rather than cause trouble in America, the British concern had held up its release here. There are still no plans for showing it in America.

The picture had incited trouble at its showing in the British zone of Germany, but the circumstances concerning this indicate some degree of mystery and since I don't know all the details I shall not go into them.

There's Not a Trace

BUT, having seen "Oliver Twist," I do know that there is not a trace of anti-Semitism in the picture, that it is an excellent film and that it most certainly deserves an audience in this country.

For one thing, this pressure campaign against the picture is but a glaring example of the ceaseless pressures which constantly assail the movie-makers. Such campaigns, as much as anything else, lead to the watery pap which is the rule of most films. All groups, business, professional and religious, strike fear into the naturally box-office conscious movie makers. It is a revealing facet of the artificiality of these groups that when one of their ukases is disregarded, the reaction of the public is nil. The basis for success, as always, is a good picture.

Further than this, pressure groups have the effect of subtly promoting their own causes. "One Foot in Heaven," an excellent picture, was a partial result of Protestant dissatisfaction with the great spate of Roman Catholic films which immediately preceded it.

Fagin the Target

"OLIVER TWIST" has been attacked, as John Mason Brown has pointed out, not by a minority, but by a minority within a minority. Rabbi Theodore N. Lewis, who admitted he had not seen the picture, led the action taken by the New York Board of Rabbis to ban the picture in that city.

Fagin is the center of the attack, just as Shylock has been in the concurrent fight aganst "The Merchant of Venice." The pressure group feels that this teacher of pickpockets is a Jewish villain, not just an English villain.

Now, despite those who would ban a picture they themselves have not seen, let me assure you there is not a single mention of the word "Jew" in "Oliver Twist," nor any indication that he is of any faith or particular race. Ironically, the actor who so splendidly plays this old fellow, Alec Guinness, is married to a Jewess and nothing was further from his mind than enacting a slur on his wife's race. As played in the picture and as Dickens created him, Fagin is but a creature of a much more wicked man, Bill Sikes. For all the audience knows, Sikes was confirmed in the Church of England, which according to the pressure group's logic, should rate a campaign by members of that faith.

The Real Villain

DICKENS' real villain, as the perceptive Critic Brown has remarked, is the poverty of the England which made Oliver's struggles possible. And it is here that the picture has its real meaning. Its moving depiction of the horrors poverty wrecks on the human soul is the service Dickens rendered humanity and which has kept his books alive.

A distinguished band of technicians and players has brought "Oliver Twist" to rich life on the screen. John Howard Davies, the son of one of England's film critics, plays the boy and the cast further includes such names as Robert Newton (Bill Sikes), Francis L. Sullivan and Henry Stephenson.

The heart of the "Oliver Twist" matter includes far more than just whether the public is being deprived of a splendid film by a small group of vocative persons.

By accepting the ukase of this one pressure group, we strengthen the position of all pressure groups who would insist that the freedom of the American screen be defined by their own particular views.

Is not this as Hitlerian as Schicklegruber himself?

THE TWO downtown theaters of the Brothers Warner this week are all out in adulation of the glamour girls. Paulette Goddard, who rarely makes a film without a bathing sequence, has one in "Anna Lucasta," above, at the Warner. Rita Hayworth, right, stars in two reissued hits at the Metropolitan, forming a "Rita Hayworth Festival" the week her husband, Aly Khan, announced in Europe that his wife would become a mother. The Metropolitan "Festival" includes "Cover Girl," with Gene Kelly, and "You Were Never Lovelier"

There's No Climate Like California's

HOLLYWOOD.—News from Paris:

Two years ago the heat drove me home from the Middle West; and now it's run me out of Italy and Spain. There's no climate like California and let no one tell you otherwise.

However, Paris is wonderful. It's cool, green, beautiful—and empty of all except Americans. The French are vacationing. Paris is a woman's town. Everything is done to flatter and please, and let me add, it's successful.

Ran into Fibber McGee and Molly in the lobby of the Ritz Hotel. A whole saga can be written about their European jaunt, and I'll do it when I get home. They're two babes in the woods. They loved Ireland, but England and France defeated them. They went to the Cafe Montmartre, but no one recognized them and they couldn't get served. Then they went to another restaurant. Carmen Snow of Harper's Bazaar was there with a crowd. She recognized Fibber and Molly, spoke to the waiter, who came to their tables and filled their glasses. Molly said to Fibber, "Thank goodness, we're getting water, anyway." She took a big gulp, then choked for five minutes. What she thought was water was Vodka, which had been sent over with the compliments of Carmen.

The famous Montmartre Cafe is so crowded with Americans no one else can get in. It's just like any night at El Morocco or the Stork.

Toppers

ON my first day in Paris I lunched in the Ritz Garden with Mildred Ginsberg, wife of Paramount head Henry. She was wearing a new hat with a black velvet zipper on the veil. She zipped—the veil fell to one side while she ate . . . Mrs. Grover Magnin (Magnin department store) also had a new hat: a black velvet one with a huge rose.

Saw Thelma and Gloria Morgan. Thelma's taken a villa at Cannes for three months. She'll be near the Duke and Duchess of Windsor. Her son, Tony, who inherited his father's title, flew to Rome to see Princess Pignatelli's daughter.

Also lunching at the Ritz were Jack Benny and Dr. Charles I. Pincus, of Beverly Hills. They flew over for George Burns and Gracie Allen's Palladium opening . . . Mrs. Vincent Astor at the Ritz with Annabella's daughter . . . Jerome Zipkin of New York joined us and we took in an art gallery which was showing fine modern paintings.

Social Evening

DINED with Elsie Mendl at la Villa Trianon in Versailles. . . . After dinner we saw "Johnny Belinda" in Elsie's Garden Room. French titles and we enjoyed it even more than the last time we saw it. Maybe the worldly atmosphere made it better. . . . Charles Mendl is visiting in the south of France.

The Myron Taylors—He's our special envoy to the Vatican—bought many of the treasures from Elsie Mendl's Paris apartment for their Rome villa. They were here last week . . . Rita Hayworth's in almost complete retirement.—HEDDA.

Homeless Through War

World Art Hunts New Havens

By Jane Watson Crane

SOME of the European art collections, rescued from the salt mines and other less spectacular retreats, will be homeless until the museums and galleries which housed them can be reconstructed or other quarters found. Thanks to precautions taken in time and plans laid well in advance, with relatively few exceptions the objects have been saved. But in many cases the plants which exhibited them before the war were damaged or demolished.

The Vienna collections, soon to come here, have no home today. Eight bombs struck the Kunsthistoriches Museum, and virtually all the other museums of the city suffered partial or total destruction. The Berlin museum paintings, received here with such a furore last season, could not have been restored to their former home even if that were the intent. The Kaiser Friederich Museum was badly damaged.

This year, in the wake of announcements of more pressing needs for reconstruction by other agencies, UNESCO in Paris issued a slim booklet giving facts and figures on the plight of art museums in Europe. It tells of cooperating agencies through which help can be given and lists some urgent needs.

Although museums are far less numerous in Asia, they suffered looting and physical destruction.

Pantheon Book

ARCHITECTURAL losses have been recorded pictorially and conscientiously in "Lost Treasures of Europe," a Pantheon publication. Sculpture or frescoes which could not be be moved, suffered with the buildings. There were great losses of this character in Italy, the two greatest being the frescoes by Benozzo Gozzoli and others, in Pisa.

On the Island of Crete, where many of the archeological treasures found were kept in the Heraklion Museum, the building was first hit by bombardment in May, 1941. It was partially restored, then bombed out again in 1944. And in June of that same year a munitions ship blew up in the nearby harbor and all that was left of the museum went with it.

In Poland, Greece and Yugoslavia the Nazis confiscated and destroyed art treasurers according to a systematic plan. In France, Paris suffered no physical destruction, but some of the collections removed to other cities suffered damage there. France, like the United States, has a great number of local museums (roughly 1000 all told) and of those outside Paris 42 were destroyed and 65 damaged. Across the channel, all the national museums in London suffered some damage by aerial bombardment. They are opening their galleries by degrees as repairs are made. An interesting corollary is that the collections are being refurbished and rearranged as they are reinstalled.

Efforts Made

IN CASES where damage to the exterior of the buildings was slight, interior equipment suffered from concussion, and wartime neglect, added to age, makes deterioration a double misfortune. We take for granted the de luxe equipment we have in most United States museums and never stop to think about the cost of showcases, air-conditioning and all the other elaborate precautionary measures. For instance, European museums lack fire-fighting equipment, chemical products for use in restoration and preservation, and such simple things as brass wire, cardboard, thermometers, cork and cataloguing cards.

The UNESCO booklet tells of the efforts made by individuals and governments to revive their cultural institutions. Poland, which proportionately suffered the greatest damage of all, opened the Warsaw Museum while the city lay in ruins. Countries like Belgium, the Netherlands and Italy, "where museums form a vital part of the community, an all-out effort is being made to heal the cultural wounds of war."

Art Notes

Corcoran, American U. Work Is on Display at Andover

THE Corcoran School of Art and the art department of American University of Washington are among the 25 art schools represented in the second competitive exhibition of students' work organized by the Addison Gallery of American Art at Andover, Mass., which will be shown there until September 26 and later circulated.

This summer local talent has blossomed in community art shows throughout the country. Outdoors and in, the work of novices is shown beside that of visiting professionals, focal points being the summer art schools which stretch from Maine to San Diego.

At the Denver Art Museum in Colorado one of the largest and best established annuals is being held through August. Open to artists of the Far and Middle West, it covers a wide range of media, including painting, sculpture, ceramics and textiles.

Frank Lloyd Wright, who lectured in Washington this spring under the auspices of the Institute of Contemporary Arts, will have an exhibition of his work in Florence, Italy, in 1950.

Nicelai Cikovsky, former Washington artist, is included in the summer group exhibition at the Associated American Artists Galleries in New York City. Pietro Lazzari is represented there in the Contemporary American Arts show.

Ethel Robertson Gath, who was one of the District painters singled out for a one-man show at the Corcoran last summer, has returned to Michigan to live.

The fourteenth National Ceramic Exhibition will be held at the Syracuse (N. Y.) Museum of Fine Arts from October 29 to December 4. Regional judging of the entries will take place in September, in New York, Boston, Cleveland, Los Angeles, and San Francisco. A section of the show will be sent on tour after the opening, the first stop to be the galleries of the Associated American Artists in New York. Prizes amounting to $2000 have already been offered for ceramic sculpture, pottery, and enamel, among them a $500 prize for the best piece designed for mass production. In an effort to attract painters to the possibilities of dinnerware design as a worthwhile medium of expression, the show this year will include the first national exhibition of dinnerware decoration, with prizes offered by a commercial firm. Paintings which win awards will be reproduced on china or earthenware and exhibited with other entries in the Ceramic National.

The Syracuse Museum Ceramic annual, which began on a modest scale, now attracts entries from ceramists all over the country. It has been developed in collaboration with the ceramic industry.

Summer Stages Present Misses Peters, Coleman

TWO popular ladies of Hollywood star this week on the Capitol's summer stages, Susan Peters and Nancy Coleman.

Susan Peters, her promising career interrupted by a hunting accident which paralyzed her, plays Elizabeth Barret Browning in Rudolph Besier's drama, "The Barretts of Wimpole Street," opening a week's run Tuesday night at the Olney Theater.

Miss Peters, still confined to a wheelchair, scored a major success in Greer Garson's "Random Harvest," as well as in "Song of Russia" and "Assignment in Brittany." Since her accident she has appeared in "The Sign of the Ram" and, on the stage, "The Glass Menagerie."

Nancy Coleman, who costarred in "King's Row," "Edge of Darkness," "Dangerously We Live" and "Mourning Becomes Electra" in Hollywood, returns to a part she played in New York, the childlike actress of "The Voice of the Turtle." With Miss Coleman will be her Gotham costar of the John Van Druten comedy, John Beal, as the weekending sergeant.

Today brings the final two performances of John Loder and Vicki Cummings in "For Love or Money" at the Olney and tonight rings down the Meridian Hill week of Tom Ewell in "The Male Animal."

Modulated Screams Greet FCC's Ban

By Sonia Stein

WHEN the Federal Communications Commission issued new rules which clearly would cut a wide swathe in the giveaway programs, the injured parties squealed like stuck pigs. The squealing was naturally modulated and transposed into neatly mimeographed statements from the networks and the National Association of Broadcasters. We'll sue in the courts of law to get an injunction, said the networks in effect. We certainly hope they do, said the NAB, which acts as big brother to the radio stations.

There the situation stands: The FCC has said that it will not renew licenses to stations broadcasting programs which require in one way or another that people listen to that program or preceding programs to be eligible for a prize. The people "whose property interests are subject to these rules," as the NAB expresses it, are in the process of bringing the matter to court to try to show that these programs are not lotteries or even near kin, and that the FCC has no right to control them.

This attempt by the FCC to clean up a situation which has threatened to make radio a free electronic slot machine, has stirred up plenty of fury. Of all the people involved, one of the calmest is the man who has fathered five enormously successful giveaway shows, including three which come under the FCC rules banning shows permitting the home audience to play, along with the studio audience. (The programs which offer prizes only to studio contestants do not appear to be affected by the ruling.)

How Do You Give Your Child Music?

By Paul Hume

MAIL in the past weeks brought an item of great interest.

Mrs. A. K. of Raleigh st. se. writes:

"My 3½-year-old daughter seems to have a talent for music. Being ordinary laymen we are at a loss as to how to further her musical education.

"She has shown an interest in music since the age of 2, at which time she began identifying symphonic music and carrying a tune. At present she is able to hum parts of symphonies she has heard and to identify them correctly. She enjoys all music—nursery rhymes, popular and classical, but seems to prefer hearing the classics.

"She dances and conducts as she listens. She also has a very pleasing voice and is able to carry a tune perfectly. We have taken her to several national symphony concerts and she was a very rapt listener, displaying no signs of the restlessness prevalent among children her age.

Mrs. K's next paragraph puts the most intelligent proposition: "I am not a bragging mother, believe me, nor am I saying that my little daughter is a musical genius, but if she has any talent at all I would like to see it developed in the proper way."

HOW MANY PARENTS have seen these same signs in their children! It is a common occurrence for even the youngest children, meaning those from around 1 year or even less, to react with bodily movements to the stimulus of musical rhythm. It is also not uncommon for children to conduct music they hear from radios and phonographs.

They will also naturally begin to hum or sing melodies if they hear them often enough. These activities do not of themselves indicate any unusual degree of musical ability. But they most definitely show that a child is gifted with a musical ear—that he is sensitive to rhythm, and to variations in pitch.

As to what to do with such children, the wiser course is to go slowly. By all means let them hear all the music you think is good for them. That is, see that there is plenty of chance for them to hear good music on the radio and on records. Don't worry about music being too difficult for them. Children will take to Stavinsky's Rite of Spring much more readily than adults. A 6-year-old of my acquaintance is at present fascinated with Ravel's fairy tale opera, "L'Enfant et les Sortileges," an adult work with enormous child appeal.

He can identity each of the dozen or more characters in the opera instantly, and has made the music his own choice, through hearing it repeatedly and being told about it.

BUT don't force music on a child. And see to it that he hears stories-with-music designed for children as well as what you consider adult fare. Don't rob him of any of the great thrills children should have in hearing the 1812 overture, the Nutcracker Suite, Peter and the Wolf, and hundreds of other records.

Above all, keep music a perfectly average part of his life, as baseball or dolls, Chinese checkers, cowboys or ice cream. And don't rush him to a teacher for any instruction for years. Except in extraordinary circumstances, which occur about once a thousand cases, no child needs to study any kind of music before it is 8 or 10. Let kids have fun with music, but encourage the best music. They will love it just as much as popular music if given the chance.

National Symphony To Play for Children

The National Symphony Orchestra will play free concerts for Washington school children this year.

Ten concerts have been planned, six of which have already been underwritten by outstanding business firms. It is hoped that other companies will join in the project.

Present sponsors include: Lee D. Butler, Inc.; Campbell Music Company; Peoples Drug Store; Sears, Roebuck & Co.; and the Hecht Company.

Take the Dodgers

MARK GOODSON, who with his partner Bill Todman (Goodson-Todman Productions) owns and operates "Beat the Clock," "Winner Take All," "Hit the Jackpot" and "Spin to Win" on CBS and who owns and operates "Stop the Music" on ABC, makes no loud noises about taking the matter to court (since the network will do it for him, probably) but discusses it this way:

"Basically no business should have to justify itself. If nothing could exist without justifying itself, nine tenths of human activity would be wiped out. What is the necessity of the Brooklyn Dodgers?"

Actually, having been through much criticism which has been heaped on giveaway shows by the millions who simply can't see them as entertainment, Goodson is able to justify the shows rather deftly.

"Think of all the irrelevant and useless facts we teach on the quiz shows," he remarks slyly, indicating he still has perspective on the matter even if his organization did gross half a million dollars last year through giveaway shows, and occupied so much time on the air that Todman insists they are thinking of changing the name of the outfit to "Air, Incorporated." (Goodson earned a Phi Beta Kappa key in economics; Todman's father was formerly an economics professor.)

Point of View

BOTH Goodson and Todman have come to this conclusion: "A person listens to any show for one reason only—because he personally gets entertainment from it."

The question of winning anything from the show plays almost no part in attracting listeners, Goodson says. "The rating of a show in homes with no phones is within a few points of homes with phones. This should surprise nobody because most giveaway shows don't permit the home audience to win anything anyway. And there has been no correlation established between the amount of the money or prizes offered and the audience rating."

This point is supported by the popularity of the show which for years offered a maximum of $64 to a studio contestant. A show with double the jackpot of another show may run neck and neck with it for listeners. The newest quiz show, which offers the astonishing $31,000 in prizes to a home listener, hasn't enough listeners to hold its head up in the company of shows offering the home listener absolutely nothing.

People's Playhouse

GOODSON and Todman call audience participation shows the playhouse of the people, in which members of the audience act in cliff hangers which have no written ending. "Nobody knows how it will come out; the results may change the whole life of the participant. He may become famous in his home town, receive proposals, become an honored citizen by turning his prizes over to an institution or church," they claim. "The shows are a cross between a parlor game and a large-scale spectator sport in which the listener can more easily identify himself than he can with a champion boxer."

The presences of prizes on the show add materially to the sense of excitement, according to Goodson and Todman. Although the recipients usually want to turn most of the prizes into spot cash, the audience enjoys hearing about the prizes—the Amelia Earhart luggage, the trip aboard the Queen Elizabeth, the Sally Victor hats. Mentioning the brand name adds luster to the prizes in addition to adding prizes to the Goodson-Todman kitty, which relies on the publicity value of the shows

Howard Group To Take Ship Wednesday

THE Howard University Players will sail Wednesday from New York on the Stravangerfjord for Norway, where, at the invitation of the Norwegian government, they will give a series of theatrical performances.

The invitation to play in Norway was inspired by the Players' production of Ibsen's "The Wild Duck." Attending its performance at the campus theater last winter, the Norwegian cultural attache was so struck with the American tribute to his land's great playwright, that he suggested the visit.

Transportation costs have been met by funds made available through the Norwegian cultural attache and through a generous donation by Blevins Davin, the Missouri philanthropist who presented the American performance of "Hamlet" at Elsinore, Denmark, this summer.

The University players also will present the DuBose and Dorothy Hayward drama, "Mamba's Daughters," in Oslo and other Scandinavian cities.

'Baby Mine' Opens Run Wednesday

Bringing down the curtain for the theater's tenth summer, "Baby Mine" will open a four-night run Wednesday night at the Mountain Theater, Braddock Heights, Md.

This farce by Margaret Mayo has been chosen as the summer's windup by Director James Decker because Miss Mayo's noted hit, "Twin Beds," has always been one of the theater's strongest successes.

The theater plays nightly Wednesday through Saturdays in the small hilltop spot five miles west of Frederick.

to lure manufacturers to replenish its treasure chest.

The prizes add an artificial risk to the show which stimulates interest, Goodson figures. "Sure," says Todman, "if we offer to race around the block you wouldn't bother to watch us, but if there's $1000 at stake, you would." Goodson, translating it into prizes, mused, "Or if the prize was that that the winner could take the other guy's wife out . . ."

They are so convinced that the American competitive spirit rules these matters, they insist you could run a show (if it were legal, which it is not) involving punishments for failures instead of rewards for success.

Calls It Hasty

GOODSON, who doesn't pretend to justify all giveaway shows, feels that in its recent ruling the FCC acted too hastily. "There are a number of marginal shows which cannot hold an audience and will be dropped by sponsors and networks. Finally we'll have just the shows that the people indicate by their vote in tuning in—that they want to keep."

All of the Goodson-Todman shows could be adapted to involve the studio audience only, if the FCC ruling is upheld in court, but "that means the man in New York can play and the man in Kansas City can't. We could do it the other way just as we could use a harmonica instead of an orchestra. But why not do it the best way?" Goodson inquires mildly.

Iwo Jima Heroes In Flag Episode

Hollywood (AP).—When the flag-raising on Mount Surabachi is reenacted for the film "Sands of Iwo Jima," survivors of that historic occasion will be on hand to repeat the initial planting of the colors.

The event will be an important scene in the picture, which stars John Wayne. Of the six men who actually raised the flag for the first time, three are still living: Ira Hayes, Rene Gagnon and John Bradley. They will appear in the picture, along with Capt. H. G. Schrier, who led the platoon up Surabachi.

The same flag will be used, says Republic studios, and Joe Rosenthal, the photographer who took the historic picture for the Associated Press, likewise will be on hand, to portray himself.

Sinatra's Team Wins

Frank Sinatra's Swooners whipped Andy Russell's Sprouts in their annual Out-of-This-World Series, which raised $24,000 for youth work. Some of the actors proved to be softball stars as well. Funniest gag came when a taxi stopped at the players' bench and delivered the stars to their field positions.

Eleanor Powell is set for her screen reappearance in "Duchess of Idaho." She will play herself and do a dance number.

Bette Davis is incommunicado to the press for the duration of her Warners contract. That will be in a week or two when she finishes "Beyond the Forest." Then maybe she'll have something to say.

Local Shops To Sell Fine English Decca Recordings

DURING the final years of the war, English Decca recordings came into prominence in this country as representing the finest quality recordings produced in large quantities.

Their trade slogan, "full frequency range recording," usually shortened to "ffrr," came to stand for quiet surfaces, tonal realism and beautifully balanced reproduction. Among their outstanding albums were such notable releases as Ernest Ansermet's Petrouchka with the London Philharmonic Orchestra, the excellent short version of Gluck's Orfeo under Fritz Stiedry, wonderful French works by Munch and the Paris Conservatory orchestra, and great sets by Eduard Van Beinum and the Amsterdam Concergiebouw.

The chief problem in Washington was that distribution was never sufficiently smoothed out to provide easy public access to these discs. Now the London Gramophone Corp., with offices in New York, has taken over the name and distribution of these sets. The records will be known as London FFRR, and will come out in both 78 and 33 1-3 r.p.m.

Distribution problems are being solved with American efficiency. Record buyers will be able to get these exceptional records in several of the city's more exclusive shops.

London Gramophone is also releasing some astounding records with the label, "Deutsche Grammophon." These imported German recordings have received the highest praise from alert American reviewers. In technical quality and musical excellence, they surpass the average record produced in this country.

These records, too, are becoming available in Washington. Both Deutsche Grammophon and London FFRR records will be reviewed regularly in this column from now on. The price of the Deutsche Grammophon discs is a bit high, $2.65 each. But that is the cost of HMV (English Victor) records which many buyers have found well worth the cost.

Deutsche Grammophon repertoire includes such names as Leipzig Gewandhaus, Berlin Philharmonic, Saxon State Orchestra, Berlin State and Conductors De Sabata, Jochum and Van Beinum. Their sets so far have included good abbreviated accounts of Weber's Freischutz, Nicolai's Merry Wives of Windsor, the Bruckner eighth symphony and unusual and outstanding symphonic, chamber and vocal recordings.

The record industry is entering what will undoubtedly turn into one of its most highly competitive periods. Turntable speeds seem to be settling into three divisions, with 78 and 33 1/3 carrying by far the majority of the classical load.

Barter Begins 'Second Half'

ABINGDON, VA., Aug. 27.—Virginia's Barter Theater this week launches the second half of its annual summer drama festival. Five plays, including one new fantasy, are listed.

"You Can't Take It With You" is billed for Monday evening and Saturday's matinee and evening. The new play, on Friday night, is "Baa-Baa, Black Sheep," a cowboy fantasy by Montgomery Hare, the resident Barter playwright. Gordon Sommers will play the leading role of an Indian chief and Caddell Burroughs, Tom McDermott, Rudy Pugliese, Robert Blackburn, Owen Phillips, Mary Hayden, Pat Larson, Barbara Van Ornama and Mary Gerschank complete the cast.

Tuesday night "The Show-Off" will be played, with "The Torch Bearers" listed for two performances Wednesday and "For Love or Money" for Thursday evening.

At the Bridge Table

Cumberland Tourney Next for D. C. Players

By Marian H. Barre

CONTRACT championships of the Cumberland Valley begin at the George Mason Hotel in Alexandria at 8:15 p.m., on September 2. Concurrent men's and women's pair games are first on the program.

Mixed pairs play Saturday, open pairs Sunday, teams-of-four Labor Day, all events being two-round games at 2:15 and 8:15 p.m., except on Monday when the whistle blows at 12:30 p.m. The tourney is sponsored by the Washington Bridge League, Mrs. H. G. Campbell, president of its Women's Auxiliary, serving as chairman, with Alvin Landy directing.

Defenders of 1948 titles are C. C. Johnson—Lt. Col. J. T. Willis, Mrs. Marianne Boschan—Mrs. Fred Eberson, Mrs. J. G. Fletcher—David Murray, Charles Shapiro—Irwin Fisher, Mrs. Dora Schwartz—L. M. Rosenfeld, Dr. W. H. Gorton—Dr. N. J. McHugh.

A local group attending the Piedmont Tournament at Natural Bridge, Va., August 19 to 21, returned with honors. J. G. Stone, the District's latest Life Master, and W. A. Poissant captured the ranking open championship while Wallace Ashby won the mixed pair title with a Virginia partner. The J. R. McGhees were on the runner-up team and David Murray and Dorothy Chance placed second to Ashby.

FINAL session of the annual mixed championship at the F. Arthur Walker Club will be played this evening at 7:30 at 1511 N. Quincy st., Arlington, Va. Mr. and Mrs. Paul Blassangame led the first round with a point edge over Mrs. Dixie Wright and Lieut. Col. H. A. Walker.

The Federal Bridge League's monthly master point game is scheduled at 8 p. m. tomorrow in the league's quarters at 1300 New Hampshire ave. La Salle studios will hold a rating point game that same evening.

With the meeting Wednesday at Hotel Roosevelt, the Washington Bridge League winds up its summer series, the 1949-'50 season starting on September 7 with a master point pair contest.

Miss Mazie Buie had an orchid pinned on her shoulder when she was honor guest at the Chess Club party on August 20. This popular teacher and game director holds a unique place in the bridge world that her permanent departure from Washington will leave void. Her high standards of ethics and etiquette served as a model to many young players.

Farewells are being said also to Col. and Mrs. John Geddes, who are leaving for Fort Monmouth, N. J. The Geddes collected master points as a souvenir at the Arlington Farms match on August 19 when they won north-south. Leaders in the other position were Mrs. G. Woods and Mrs. P. Talbot. The Alfred Barnards and Mrs. S. H. Beasley and Mrs. J. A. Dearing took second honors.

A duel took place between Mr. and Mrs. W. A. Pestell, annual visitors here from Palo Alto, Calif., at the Euclid Studio matinee on August 20, when they split partnership but chose to play in the same position. Paired with Mrs. M. H. Barre, Mr. Pestell finished with a 10-point lead over his lady, who played with Mrs. Boschan. In the east-west seats the George Kathans defeated Mrs. H. G. Campbell and Miss Laura Hunter by half a point.

Fine List at Cathedral Today

Richard Dirksen, associate organist and choirmaster of the cathedral, has assembled an amazing list of music for men's voices. There will be first performances of music by Ronald Arnatt, Richard Clem, and Dirksen himself, and Washington premieres for Lili Boulanger's 24th Psalm and Clarence Watters' Laudate Pueri.

Clem's work is a setting of a modern prayer, the text for which is by another Washingtonian, Hugh Langdrum. Arnatt's Nunc dimittis, originally written as a vocal solo, will have its first hearing in arrangement for men's voices.

Dirksen has written a setting of the ancient poem, Jam Sol Recedit Igneus, "Now sinks the golden sun to rest." Lili Boulanger was the younger sister of world famous Nadia Boulanger, composer, conductor, and teacher. Nadia herself has often remarked that her sister was the really gifted member of the family. In any case, the young composer, who died at the age of 25, left a number of works, striking in their originality and in the promise of a fine future.

Of these, the 24th Psalm, written for brass instruments, organ, and either mixed or male chorus, is a particularly good example. Hymns for the afternoon will be by contemporary composers, and the organ works are by Bruce Simonds and Leo Sowerby. Altogether, the program is a practically unique occasion for the encouragement of fine contemporary church music.

AT 3 this afternoon, Bernard Herrmann will conduct the CBS Symphony in a Handel suite, and in the radio premiere of Igor Stravinsky's suite from the recent ballet, Orpheus. The score for the ballet has been widely acclaimed as one of the finest works from the great Russian. The suite, while lacking the accompaniment of the dance for which it was intended, is said to be a rewarding work, even as are Firebird, Petrouchka, and the many others more often heard than seen.

Frederick Fall announces rehearsals for the Department of Agriculture Orchestra, beginning Tuesday at 8 p. m. Membership in the orchestra is open to anyone who can qualify musically. Repertoire for the fall concert will include Bruckner's 4th Symphony, and something from an American composer.

The U. S. Marine Band will play in Indianapolis this week and therefore will not present its customary Wednesday evening program on the Capitol steps.

From Philadelphia word of interest to Washingtonians; Eugene Ormandy's contract has been extended through the season of 1953-54. This should answer any who have been saying that Philadelphia was dissatisfied with Ormandy and thinking of making any change.

From San Francisco a happy note: Kirsten Flagstad will sing with the San Francisco Opera this fall. We mentioned this several weeks ago, and then a storm arose on the west coast over the great soprano. Read this carefully and meditate on it: "In response to a request from Acting Mayor George Christopher, the United States Ambassador to Norway, Charles U. Bay, cabled that the Norwegian government had cleared Mme. Flagstad of all suspicion of participating in her late husband's wartime activities, which had been officially condemned as collaborationist. The Norwegian government has no objections to Mme. Flagstad's appearing in Norway or anywhere she wishes, according to the cable."

Would it be too much to ask someone to have Mme. Flagstad sing in Washington as soon as possible? P. H.

Walter Does A Good Turn For 'Triple'

BEETHOVEN: Triple Concerto, for violin, cello, piano and orchestra. New York Philharmonic under Bruno Walter. Columbia 842. $5.

Many years ago Columbia issued an album of this music with the Vienna Philharmonic under Weingartner. In tone and general mechanical sound it seemed rather dead, and almost affected the music in the same way. The concerto is not one of Beethoven's greater works, and needs brightness in sound, as well as conception to make it come off.

And yet consider its position in the list of Beethoven compositions: written just after the Eroica symphony and just ahead of the Appassionata sonata, the fourth piano concerto, and the Rasoumowsky quartets. Do you think it worthy of a hearing?

Then try this version. Here is the kind of music for which Bruno Walter was born. Here too is the orchestra from which he draws some of the most beautiful sound in the world. And the soloists, lacking the brilliant names of such luminaries as Heifetz or Arrau, are the soundest musicians, cooperating in what is actually a kind of concerto grosso.

The concerto has some of the most beautiful of all Beethoven in its slow movement—isn't that enough of a recommendation for anyone? Its outer movements do not possess the striking thematic material of the more frequently heard concertos or symphonies, but the use of the themes is typical and skillful.

The performance is so warm and sympathetic, the engineering of the three solo instruments against the orchestra so well done, that this set will go far to make converts for this unfamiliar music. It should.

Tschaikowsky: Symphony No. 6, the Pathetique. NBC Symphony under Toscanini. Victor DV-27. $11.

This is a plastic version at 78 r.p.m. There is also a 45 r.p.m. set, and one on regular shellac. I would recommend the shellac at 78 as being the best value. The 45 r.p.m. has some of the noisiest surfaces and lowest fidelity I have heard for a long time, and the plastic set does not seem worth the extra price.

As for the music, you know it—it remains only to discuss Toscanini in it. You may remember that this was one of the outstanding masterworks ever played by the octagenarian maestro until a few years ago.

And quite naturally there were plenty of pros and cons on his interpretation from the moment he began its somber measures. I find him most exciting, and satisfying, in the third movement where he refuses to yield one inch to the temptation to slow down where Tschaikowsky has not marked any slowdown.

For me the greatest version of this music is still the incomparable reading of Furtwangler and the Berlin Philharmonic on Victor. Toscanini presses the last movement so hard it lacks its needed poignancy. And the first movement does not flow—it rushes, which again is out of character. But try it for yourself and see. It may be just what you have always wanted in this most unpredictable symphony. The mechanical side of every version leaves a good deal to be desired. P. H.

WTOP to Pick Prettiest Girl

WTOP is seeking the most beautiful 15-year-old in the Washington area. She will be chosen, from six finalists, by public vote this fall.

The beautiful teen-ager will win a gold wrist watch and a chance at the national prize of an all-expense trip to Hollywood, screen and television tests, wardrobe by a famous Hollywood designer, and an appearance on the "Lux Radio Theater" over the coast-to-coast CBS network.

The contest is open to any girl born in 1934, the year the Lux radio theater began.

Contestants will be judged by photos sent to WTOP before September 12. The address: Radio Theater, WTOP, Warner Building, Washington 4, D. C.

From these photos local judges will pick the six most beautiful girls. Their photos will be exhibited in newspapers and store windows all over this area. The public will mail votes for the favorite to WTOP between October 14 and November 14.

The District of Columbia winner will be announced Monday night, November 21, on the Lux Radio Theater broadcast. Her photo will be sent to Hollywood for the national judging.

Motorola to Exhibit New Television Line

The new Motorola television line will be shown at the Shoreham Hotel this Tuesday and Wednesday. Dealers will see the new models during the day; the public is invited to view them from 7:30 to 10 o'clock both evenings.

The Simon Distributing Corp., which is arranging the showing, says the new models have a number of improvements including a noise rejector and simplified tuning.

Bette Davis . . . costars with James Stewart in "June Bride" over WTOP tomorrow at 9 p. m.

Robert Cummings . . . heard on "Four Star Playhouse" Sunday evenings at 8 on WRC

Redskin Exhibition To Be on WMAL

The first Redskins game to be broadcast this year will be heard over WMAL at 4:10 p. m. next Sunday. Washington will play the Chicago Bears in Crump Stadium, Memphis, Tenn.

Harry Wismer and Jim Gibbons will call the plays and give local color.

WMAL will broadcast three exhibition games and all 12 league games during the season. The six home games will be telecast over WMAL-TV. Only one other pro-football team will be televised this season—the Green Bay Packers.

AFRA Show Moves to WOL

THE American Federation of Radio Artists' 16-week series of dramatic shows, designed to "showcase" local acting talent for prospective sponsors, will move over to WOL for the next four weeks starting Wednesday night at 10. The first four in the series were broadcast Thursday nights on WTOP. The final eight will be aired by WRC and WMAL.

Three of the scripts to be used at WOL are the work of Larry Frommer, who will also produce all four shows there.

His three shows will be "Thou Shalt Not Want," the story of a man about to commit suicide; "The Wall," a documentary tracing the development of hate in a child, and an adaptation of Charles Dickens' "Tale of Two Cities." The second in the WOL series will be a comedy called "Marry Me Maybe," by Eileen Penny.

New Group At A. U. Plans 5 Concerts

AMERICAN UNIVERSITY announces a new chamber music organization which will give five concerts in Clendenin Hall during the coming year.

Members of the group, to be known as the American University Chamber Music Society, will come from the ranks of the National Symphony Orchestra and will include other local musicians. Nucleus of the society will be a string quartet consisting of George Steiner and Alan Martin, violins; George Wargo, viola, and John Martin, cello.

The announcement comes from Emerson Meyers, newly appointed head of the piano department in the university and musical director of the society. David Stone, musicologist on the staff, will prepare notes for the series. Concerts are set for October 11, November 15, January 17, February 7 and April 4. The historical aspect of the series will be emphasized by limiting each program to music of a given period, the entire five concerts surveying the past four centuries.

Music already announced includes Bach's Musical Offering, the Beethoven septet, Cesar Franck's piano quintet, the Ravel trio and a quartet of Anton von Weber.

These concerts will be open to the public without charge. Because the capacity of the hall is limited, cards of admission will be issued for a reserved seat section. Anyone desiring such cards may write for them to the Music Department, American University, Washington, 16, not later than September 20.

Holders of seat cards will receive advance copies of the program notes. Other seats will be on a first-come, first-served basis.

The Question Is, Why Counterfeit a 3-Center?

By William M. Stuart

SECRET SERVICE agents have scattered a crew of counterfeiters in New York City charged with the manufacture of bogus 3-cent stamps. However, but few of the bogus items were found in circulation because the Treasury acted promptly. The Secret Service reports that more than eight million of these forged stamps were discovered in the Bronx. They were in large packages and wrapped in full sheets of 100 subjects. Evidently the bogus material was discarded hastily, leaving the counterfeiters unable to dispose of the stamps.

STUART

It has always been a mystery why counterfeiters should attempt to dispose of bogus 3-cent stamps. It is a difficult task to make counterfeit stamps and it is almost impossible to successfully dispose of even a small number. No counterfeit sheet of three cent stamps could be broken and passed through the mails without being noticed. The use of bogus stamps would lead to immediate detection, for the postmarks on counterfeit stamps furnish a clew that always leads to certain detection. The counterfeit United States postage stamp has never been freely circulated, perhaps because the material is of such inferior quality the deception would be uncovered before distribution gained headway.

ON SEPTEMBER 15 air mail service will be inaugurated on route AM-79, between Springfield, Mass., Hartford, and Willimantic, Conn.; Providence, R. I.; Norwood and Boston, Mass. Special cachets will be applied to covers mailed at the above cities, as well as the Air Mail Field, Boston. The usual treatment of philatelic mail has been authorized.

Sepad, an association of stamp clubs of the south eastern Pennsylvania and Delaware, will hold its twelfth national stamp exhibition in the Commerical Museum, 34th and Spruce sts., Philadelphia, Pa., November 11 to November 19.

Leo August of the Washington Press, Newark, N. J., has just issued the seventeenth edition of the United States specialized catalogue of first-day covers. It is a volume of more than 50 pages and contains much valuable information of prices and listings of covers from 1918. A listing of the 1930 Graf Zeppelins, the 65-cent, $1.30 and $2.60, all on cover is noted at $160 and the same in for blocks of four is quoted at $600.

INSTEAD of the scheduled meeting of the Government Printing Office for September 1, the club will be guest of the superintendent of the mails of the main City Postoffice. Members will assemble at 4:40 p. m. at the entrance of the postoffice, North Capitol st. and Massachusetts ave. nw.

Mrs. Elizabeth Medbery, president of the Silver Spring (Md.) Philatelic Society, will be the speaker at the meeting of the Friendship Stamp Club on September 7 at the Eldbrooke Church, Wisconsin ave. and River rd. nw.

The Capital Precancel Club will meet tomorrow evening at the home of Clement H. Evans, 8119 Hartford ave., Silver Spring, Md.

The Collectors Club, Branch 5, S. P. A., met Tuesday evening in Pythian Temple, President Galloway presiding. On October 18 a test auction sale will be held, on lot to be offered that does not catalogue $2 or over. L. L. MacKallor spoke of the number of counterfeit cancelations on the market and urged that all members be on guard as to bogus material. Another meeting will be held Tuesday evening at Pythian Temple, 1012 9th st. nw.

The Woodridge Stamp Club will meet tomorrow evening from 9 to 11 p. m. in the Woodridge Public Library, 2206 Rhode Island ave. ne. There will be no meeting on Labor Day.

Afternoon in Paris: Tables of the Café de la Paix remain a magnet for American tourists.

Café de la Paix

You can still look for your friends in one of Paris's favorite spots

ACCORDING TO PREWAR LEGEND, if you sit long enough at the sidewalk tables of Paris's famed Café de la Paix in the shadow of the Opera, you will eventually see everyone you have ever met come striding, strolling or wandering by. You can call him over, buy him a lemonade, and talk about old times. That's Paris.

No one, so far as is known, has ever put the legend to the absolute test. But during the last three months, Americans in swarms have been giving the old myth a trial run. For this summer more than 200,000 of them have visited France, and every day since June, at least 10,000 of them have been in Paris. Of these at least 1,000 have strolled into the Café de la Paix every afternoon to sit down at its 200 street-side tables.

Why? Partly because of hallowed tradition, founded by generations of past voyagers to the banks of the Seine.

But mainly because the Café is at the junction of two of the best shopping streets in Paris, because it is only a step from American Express (money, tickets and letters from home), and because to the jaded gallery-goer, the exhausted pilgrim to Fontainebleau, and the lonesome expatriate, it's accessible, informal and, like all cafes, cheap.

What do they do? Like Frenchmen, they sit, talk, read newspapers, sip coffee. But being Americans, they wonder whether citronade is a very good substitute for lemonade, whether it is really possible to cultivate a taste for the more special French aperitifs like Suze and Pernod, whether the folks back home are thinking about them. They read the Paris Tribune, plan tomorrow's forays on the galleries, the churches, the night clubs and the girl-shows. After they leave, the waiters pick up the dishes, pocket the tips, and look around for another tourist. He's usually right there.

These are Americans who happened to be sitting at the tables of the Café de la Paix between five and seven p.m. one afternoon recently. Keith Williams, Washington, D.C., architect (left), chats with Mrs. M. Kunzelman and sister-in-law, Marion Kunzelman, of Evanston, Ill., and Charlotte Barkhausen of Chicago.

Eunice Graubart of Chicago delays eating ice until she finishes letter home. Patrons are never rushed.

Major and Mrs. Richard W. Vogel of Brooklyn spend part of military leave from Austria watching crowds.

Kathryn Gray of Wakefield, Va., takes movies as sister Barbara watches. Camera is hallmark of tourist.

Art student Paul B. Taylor of Westport, Conn., watches while companion Eve Zwaska, also of Westport, turns full force of pocket dictionary on waiter in ordering complicated coffee-chocolate mixture. Tables are most crowded from 3 to 8 p.m., fill later in evening. Café serves no meals, stacks chairs soon after midnight.

The Turning Point

DOROTHY KIRSTEN: Did she hear correctly . . . ?

DOROTHY KIRSTEN, a radiant young woman with authentic blonde hair who comes from Montclair, N. J., now stands high among the stars of the Metropolitan Opera Company. But with her as with all successful artists, it was not always thus.

Miss Kirsten, who made her singing debut at the New York World's Fair in 1940, faithfully surmounted the obstacles in the way of any young singer: the interminable lessons, the days of practicing, the mastery of foreign languages, the desperate stage-fright of early public appearances. Then, a few years ago, came an audition for operetta which, if successful, could lead on and up to the very top. If ever Dorothy Kirsten had reached a turning point, this was it.

Her appointment was to be at four o'clock one winter afternoon. Grace Moore, already famous as a concert and opera star, was to hear her. Dorothy arrived punctually—but there was no Miss Moore.

Ten minutes went by, twenty, then thirty and forty. Finally, at 10 minutes to five, Miss Moore plunged in, tears in her eyes, a battered hat over one eye. Between sobs she told of having been knocked down by a taxi. But she demanded that the audition go on.

It went on. Dorothy summoned her courage, tried to forget the delay, her own nervousness, Miss Moore's obvious distraction. And then she sang.

Minutes later, she turned to Grace Moore. The latter sat silent, then she said, "Dorothy, I'm afraid I can't introduce you to the producer. You're not for operetta."

THE TURNING POINT

That, thought Dorothy, was that. She felt humiliated, utterly discouraged.

But Grace kept on talking, "I won't have you in operetta," she said quietly. "You belong in grand opera." To Dorothy, bells rang, and suddenly life seemed very sweet.

That was the beginning. After a few months training, Dorothy made her opera debut with the Chicago Civic Opera Company. A few years later, she joined the Metropolitan. Meanwhile the operetta for which she had once cherished such high hopes lasted on Broadway for five days.

Two begging pelicans on St. Petersburg pier get a half-dollar's worth of mullet from a tourist. Some birds beg six pounds a day.

A Pelican's Privilege

Tossing tid-bits to waterfowl has become almost a minor sport in St. Petersburg, Fla.

IN EUROPE, AFRICA AND ASIA pelicans stand in shoal lakes and scoop up fish as they go by. In northwest America they sometimes combine forces to drive fish into the shallows. But in St. Petersburg, Fla., they get their meals the easy way: by begging fish from tourists.

It's become such a habit with the pelicans that a business has even grown up around it. Fishermen now sell mullet to concessionaires; the concessionaires pass them along to tourists (for $1 a pound). And tourists toss them into the big scoop-beaks of St. Petersburg's brown pelicans—free.

When a visitor appears on the waterfront, pelicans wait (sometimes in groups of seven or eight) to see if he is going to buy mullet. Nor does a pelican ever miss a fish morsel tossed his way.

St. Petersburg's pelicans, in fact, now expect tid-bits from tourists almost as an ornithological "right."

Highway Hypnosis: our newest hazard

Monotonous roads may throw you into a trance which can lead to accidents, says a psychologist who studies motoring

By GRIFFITH W. WILLIAMS, Ph. D.

YOU'VE READ ABOUT IT in the past, and you'll read about it tomorrow morning. The facts always go something like this:

"On or about 9 a.m. on a bright, clear morning, driver John Jones of Anytown suddenly wheeled his dark-green Holiday '8' off the straightaway of Superhighway 10 and struck the abutment of an overpass. Police could not explain the accident, since traffic was light, and the day clear."

Nor could John Jones tell us what happened. He's dead. So are his two or three or four passengers. We know that he wasn't drunk. And we know that he wasn't sleepy. He'd been driving for only an hour and after a good night's sleep at that. Technicians examined the wreckage and ruled out mechanical failure.

"Well," you rightfully ask, "what did happen?"

Some psychologists — and this writer is one — will offer the suggestion that John Jones was the victim of hypnosis. Yes, that's right, h-y-p-n-o-s-i-s.

Does the word conjure up a side show? Or do you immediately think of a suave, soft-speaking hypnotist, putting his victim into a trance through the use of "superior will power," a "magnetic eye" or "dominant personality?"

THE AUTHOR: A researcher in trance phenomena, Dr. Williams is associate professor of psychology at Rutgers University.

Popular belief to the contrary, most hypnosis is actually self-induced. Whatever the claims of the hypnotist, the most he can do is provide the best conditions for the person to be hypnotized — monotony, repetition and freedom from distraction.

If he can relax and wipe all thought from his mind, any normal person can go into a hypnotic trance.

And he doesn't need a hypnotist. He can do the job himself—as he often unconsciously does—in his own living room before the backdrop of soft music, in a dimly-lighted church and, yes, even on a modern superhighway.

Cold statistic John Jones is a graphic example.

Our new highways are designed for speed. Old dangers have been removed. But have we created new ones? Let's look at some facts.

Most superhighways are straight and flat. The concrete is bright and endless. Intersections and stop lights have been eliminated. So have billboards. Directly ahead of the driver is the ever-present "wet spot" of glare which, like the end of the rainbow, forever keeps its constant distance.

Even the car adds to the monotony, since the owner and mechanic will be satisfied only when it "purrs." Engineering of the roadbed and mechanical excellence of the car itself reduce steering to a minimum. A bright hood ornament often remains fixed in the driver's line of sight.

No curves, no grades, little traffic—mile after mile of endless repetition and monotony. Put the car and the road together and you have a trance-inducing environment more favorable than can be found in many psychological laboratories. Only it's on a larger scale. Much larger. And it's infinitely more dangerous.

Our old roadways with the constant threat of the stop light, the dangerous curve, the narrow bridge and even billboards—distractions enough to sustain a watchful alertness in most drivers—are fast being replaced. The superhighway has erased these bugaboos — and created a new one of its own.

Unless you're watching for it, chances are that you'll never know that you've been highway hypnotized —hypnotized as thoroughly as any subject in a college laboratory demonstration.

How many times have you heard drivers declare that they "dozed off," or "fell asleep," or "just weren't thinking?"

The rub is that you're not sleepy in mid-morning or tired after an hour's drive on a cool afternoon. Some of the genuine difficulties of driving, of course, stem from drowsiness or fatigue. But the trance is not sleep.

Let's look at the difference.

The writer knows a professional woman whose work requires her to drive long distances over good roads where traffic is heavy only in summer. She discovered that she habitually could not recall driving between towns 15-20 miles apart. This worried her and she was about to seek psychiatric advice when she heard of "road hypnosis." This gave her a key to the nature of her problem.

A manufacturer from Rochester, N.Y., wrote regarding a motor trip home from New York City: "Traveling north on the parkway, I very definitely felt mentally numbed by the steady speed of the car, by the long stretches of smooth-moving traffic and by the absence of stop lights. But once off the parkway, I seemed to 'snap out of it . . .' "

A New Orleans newscaster, like many other drivers, is more easily affected at night. "When the lights of a town approached," he recalls, "I realized that I had been in an almost asleep condition for about 25 miles. I did not remember the stretch of road at all!"

The overpowering monotony of our superhigh-

In recalling a series of similar incidents, a Pittsburgh motorist admitted that "these experiences have always baffled and frightened me."

"I had driven," he wrote of one incident, "for about an hour and had just passed through Chehalis, Wash. There was little traffic, and I was feeling sleepy. I blinked my eyes to break the dazed feeling and I discovered that I was just leaving Tenino. Twenty miles had vanished in that blink."

All experiences of road hypnosis do not fit into the same rigid pattern. Maybe you have had an experience similar to that of a Maryland driver who has no trouble during the day as she is "kept alert by the constant panorama to be seen on both sides of the road." But at night, "traveling these same roads, I sometimes have difficulty in taking my eyes from the pavement long enough to even look at the gas gauge or speedometer. There was one night . . . I had to stop several times, get out and walk around the car to break this trance."

This last observation brings us back sharply ways, says Professor Williams, can lull the unsuspecting motorist into a trance. Hypnosis is a menace, he warns, that may cause many crashes.

to our point of departure—the new hazards that arise when new cars are driven along new superhighways.

"Our new car," writes one driver, "practically drives itself." That's the trouble.

You have probably experienced the most common manifestation of road hypnosis yourself.

HOW TO AVOID HIGHWAY HYPNOSIS

- Conversation, providing it doesn't take attention from road, will keep you alert.
- The car radio can help, but it can hinder, too. Steer clear of soothing music.
- Munching on a candy bar or cookies helps.
- Roll down car windows to get breeze.

Remember the afternoon you were sailing along, paying attention to nothing in particular—least of all your driving? Suddenly the front wheel shot off the pavement onto the shoulder. The rough jolt cut the spell.

Not all the dangers stem merely from cars and concrete, however. As you approach most large cities at night, the rhythmic pattern of the lights, regularly spaced, adds to your difficulty. The endless contrast—light and dark, light and dark — contributes to the monotony. It reminds the psychologist immediately of Luy's Mirror, an old instrument once used to induce a trance. Two small mirrors are mounted on a rod rotated by a motor. As the mirrors move, they flash a pattern of light and dark, light and dark.

Unfortunately, many of our superhighways are apparently equipped to do an even better job!

Well, what do we do about it? Automotive and highway engineers can work marvels, but the subsequent ride is no better than the driver. The human factor cannot be ignored—not if we want to prevent needless tragedies, yes, like John Jones'.

The psychologist is familiar with highway hypnosis, and he has a pretty good idea of what causes it. He can suggest ways to combat it.

Basically, we've got to divorce the monotony from our new superhighways.

We've got to study their landscaping and break the repetitious pattern. We've got to mix up our brushes and shrubs and trees and lawn areas until they fit no pattern. We've got to keep the drivers' panorama forever changing.

We've got to learn more about the effect of colors and paint our underpasses, overpasses and bridges so that they interest the driver instead of treacherously lulling him.

LIGHTING PATTERNS SHOULD BE IMPROVED

We've got to improve the pattern of our highway lighting, so that the night-time motorist doesn't travel from lighted to dark areas with a regularity that can be ticked off on a watch.

Essentially, we've got to offer the driver the mild distractions which spell the difference between an awareness born of a mild curiosity and dangerous mental numbness.

Above all, we've got to admit that the problem of highway hypnosis is with us. And with the opening of each new mile of superhighway, it's growing fast. We're rapidly eliminating the physical hazards from our roadways. Let's do the same for the mental hazards. For our own sake, let's do our best to take the trance out of driving.

Lovely Sharman Douglas dances with a U.S. Navy midshipman, Charles Orem, of Washington, D.C. She's often seen in company of British notables, and entertains with parties for Americans.

OUR GIRL AMBASSADOR

Sharman Douglas, from Tucson, Ariz., has taken London society by storm

WHEN MAYFAIR'S "little social season" of gay parties opens next month, Fleet Street's gossipy typewriters will be trained on two of London society's loveliest young members: the blue-eyed daughter of the American embassy and Britain's 13-year-old Princess Margaret.

Sharman Douglas, 21-year-old daughter of Ambassador Lewis Douglas, arrived in London's West End two summers ago and immediately captivated London. But what caused mild international consternation not long ago were rumors that Sharman's friendships with Britain's blue-blooded young eligibles might cut across the romantic path of her highness the Princess. And that, for not only the American Ambassador but the Royal Family as well, could be embarrassing.

For Britain takes rather seriously the dates of its royal glamor girl, Margaret, whose own blithe spirit fluctuates less than the pound sterling. All Britain was a-twitter when the first romantic rumors crept into the papers linking the Princess first with the handsome Marquess of Milford Haven, and then with the boyish Marquess of Blandford, son of the Duke of Marlborough. But then the American girl was seen and photographed with the same young men.

When she was actually reported engaged to Milford Haven, Sharman exploded.

"It's absolutely untrue!" she said.

Even though the American girl and the British princess—who are close friends—exchanged amused smiles when they met, the publicity reportedly worried Ambassador Douglas.

He could have put a stop to it all by merely packing Sharman off to a finishing school on the continent. Instead, he got Sharman to enroll for morning classes at Queen's Secretarial School in Kensington, a London suburb.

GUEST OF THE ROYAL FAMILY

All this is a far cry from the day in June, 1947, when Sharman arrived in London, a 19-year-old Vassar College student on vacation. She made her first public appearance as the cheer leader at an Anglo-American cricket-baseball match at Cambridge. Sharman was very much a typical American college girl, and she was immediately popular. Then came the great day when she went to Court. Usually such occasions consist of a curtsey, a handshake, and a brief word or two, but the King and Queen and the two Princesses were so taken with Sharman that they asked her to come again.

From that time on, acquaintance ripened into genuine friendship. It was a glorious summer for Sharman. She was the Queen's house guest at Windsor Castle, and had the rarer honor of driving in the royal carriage down the course at Ascot.

Then, in September, she went back to Vassar. But after London, life on the campus was dull; even carrying the daisy chain seemed an anti-climax.

So she left Vassar, returned to London, and again the British columnists reported that she was opening stalls for charity, appearing at first-nights and attending royal garden parties.

The most recent internationally-famous episode in Sharman's life is what London calls "l'affaire can-can"—in other words, the party she gave at the Ambassador's residence. This was attended by "everybody who is anybody"—the Duke and Duchess of Edinburgh, Princess Margaret, Mrs. Churchill, Anthony Eden and others.

It was a fancy-dress party, and the guests were supposed to come dressed as characters in their favorite novels or plays. Princess Elizabeth arrived dressed as a waitress, and the Duke of Edinburgh came as a waiter, complete with white apron. The Daily Express stated next day that at one point in the evening Sharman with Princess Margaret and ten other blue-blooded young girls, did the "can-can" for the guests.

The story was that the girls left the party without telling anyone the reason and changed from fancy dress into the traditional can-can costume—black stockings, frilly pants, black silk dress with red decorations and a feather in a jaunty hat.

Staid dowagers were shocked when they read the account. Other columnists said that Danny Kaye had taught the girls how to dance the "can-can" routine. Arriving in New York from London, Danny Kaye denied this.

A newspaper telephoned Mrs. Douglas and asked her about the report. She was obviously upset.

"I'm tired of the whole story," she said. "The girls did not dance the can-can. It was just an ordinary chorus number.

"And Danny Kaye definitely did not teach them how to do it. He dropped in one afternoon while they were rehearsing and watched them. That's all there was to it."

Mrs. Douglas is a tolerant and wise mother to Sharman. Born a Zinsser, she comes of a remarkably clever family, the most famous of whom is an uncle, Dr. Hans Zinsser—the scientist who wrote "Rats, Lice and History" and made valuable studies of the origin of typhus. Her sister is married to John McCloy, the present U.S. High Commissioner in Germany.

Observers expect that one of Britain's blue-blooded young gentlemen eventually will win Sharman's hand. Whether or not that really happens, she is the leading light in London's post-war social revival.

It cannot be said that Sharman actively makes an attempt to encourage publicity. Her charms are such that it simply follows her around. Someone asked her recently how she enjoyed the limelight.

"What limelight?" she asked lightly. "I haven't noticed it!"

With the Marquess of Blandford, Sharman visits London's Orchid Room. London observers commented: "They made a nice couple."

Likes sand without spinach ...and vice versa

Everybody knows Baby wouldn't like sand in her spinach. But everybody doesn't know how to get all the sand out—and keep nourishment in.

Who does know? We at Gerber's do. What's more, we know how to retain a high degree of vitamins and minerals in a wide variety of vegetables and fruits from peas to peaches. You see, tending to Baby's nutritional needs is something we've been doing steadily for years and years. Skeet-shooting as a substitute for excessive bird-shooting is taught boys who will one day be hunters. Boy at right prepares to release the target.

Save the Woodlands!

THE BALL GAME was in its seventh inning. The score was tied, and one man was out. Suddenly a shout came from the edge of the woods near camp:

"Trout!"

There are few things that can break up an American ball game in the seventh; but one lonely little speckled trout had done it. Away over beyond right field, one player had happened to look in a new pool. Someone had told the boys in Swan Forest Camp, near Great Barrington, Mass., that if they dammed the stream they might soon have trout.

Now the first trout had appeared, a dark shadow darting about the pool. The ball game was over for the day.

WHY THE TROUT WAS IMPORTANT

For the men who run Swan Forest camp, that trout was of tremendous importance.

"It proved," said Camp Director Elmer A. Allen, "that we were right in our ideas."

The idea behind Swan Forest Camp is that American boys—not only in Massachusetts but everywhere—can successfully take up the tremendous job of saving America's natural resources. It's a job that earlier generations have muffed: thousands of great forests are gone; wildlife has disappeared; rich soil has been allowed to wash away; streams are polluted.

SPORTSMEN WERE WORRIED

But the word "conservation" is deadly dull—especially to boys—and the sportsmen of Massachusetts, who thought up the idea of a "conservation camp" were worried: would boys really take an interest in efforts to study and save wild life?

Back of the trout pool incident was this planning: the stream that ran across the camp ground was a trout stream—but in this particular field it contained no trout. An instructor told the boys that by damming it and diverting it so it would run in the shade of the nearby woods the water would become cooler. Trout like cool water and prefer the safety of shadows. And they like pools.

Youth tries its hand at a job its elders have flubbed: protecting vanishing forests and game

Hopefully, but somewhat skeptically, the boys had gone to work. Now that first trout had caught their interest.

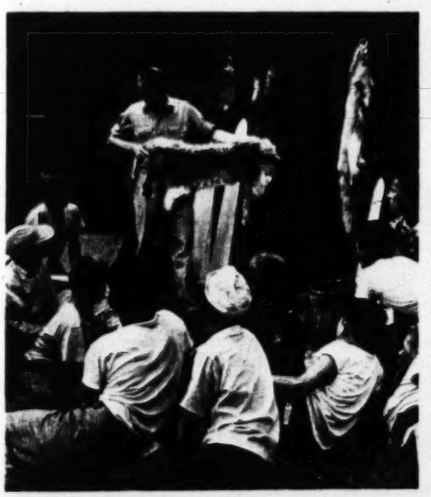
Most of the boys in Swan Forest are city-bred, know little about conservation. They are carefully selected by sportsmen's clubs which have begun to realize, Allen says, "that man may some day leave the earth as dead as the moon."

GOOD FOR OTHER STATES, TOO

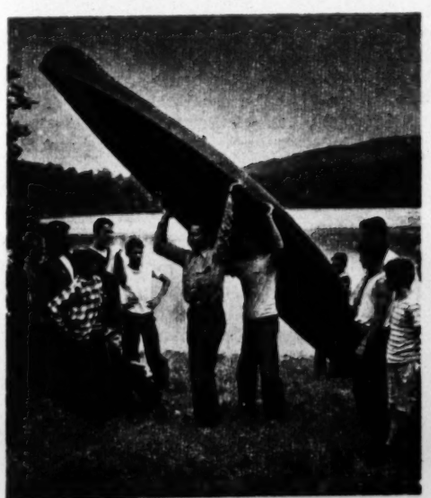
Swan Forest Camp is an idea sportsmen all over America can follow. The boys come to the camp in groups of 20 for two-week periods. When they're not improving trout streams, they trap animals, fish, hunt, study bird lore, compare mammal pelts, clean shotguns, learn how to fight forest fires, plant apple trees, clear woodlands, burn brush, swim and go canoeing, wash dishes, saw wood and toast marshmallows.

At vacation's end, says Allen, "they are more enthusiastic about conservation than they are about even the Boston Red Sox!"

Care of wild things is taught by U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service representative, Dr. William G. Sheldon. He is showing 12-year-old John Deeney a captive shrew (a diminutive, mouse-like animal) he had trapped in woods.

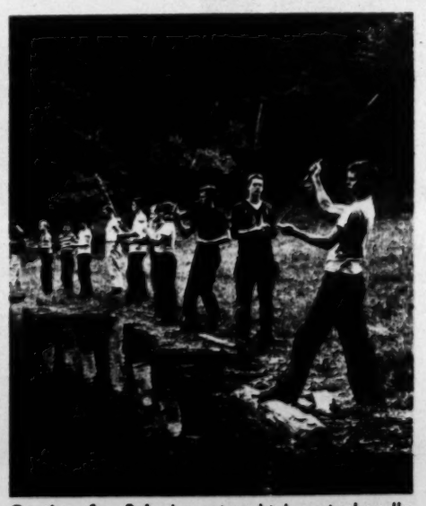


Pelt-skinning is taught the boys at Swan Forest by an expert in fish and game conservation.



Boys learn to carry, paddle, canoes — vital instruction for anyone going into the woods.

Greatest enemy of wildlife and forests is fire. With hose, pumps and love for woodlands, young sportsmen learn how to combat it.



Casting for fish: boys taught how to handle rods, reels, quickly become expert fishermen.

BENT like a dentist's mirror to reach more places

Speaking over public address system to congregation seated in automobiles, the Rev. Norman L. Hammar opens Sunday drive-in services sponsored by his North Hollywood, Calif., church. After services, members of congregation have full day for recreation.

DRIVE-IN CHURCH

You can sit in your car at the Rev. Norman Hammar's parking lot services

FOR YEARS, U.S. preachers have sought to mend the ways of parishoners who seemed to prefer golf to Gospel, circuses to church.

But few of them have done as much to solve the problem as the Rev. Norman L. Hammar, a bachelor of divinity, and pastor of the Emmanuel Lutheran Church of North Hollywood, Calif.

As befits a pastor whose church is situated a few miles from the big film studios, the Rev. Mr. Hammar borrowed an idea from the movies: he established a drive-in church, with services every summer Sunday at 8:30 a.m., on a 150-car lot.

His first one took place on July 6, 1947. Ever since, big cars and little ones, shiny autos and jalopies, have trundled up to the outside pulpit which stands behind Emmanuel Lutheran. There are now 825 members of the out-door congregation, and the parking lot is being expanded to accommodate more. Says the Rev. Mr. Hammar, "We're very pleased with the reception of the drive-in church. It was launched to offset the 40 percent summer attendance slump. With the outdoor services, attendance is constant, and we reach many people who wouldn't attend otherwise."

As with drive-in theaters, keynote of the drive-in church is "come as you are" —with picnic lunches packed, golf clubs in the luggage compartment, polo shirts and sport dresses. The service is the same as the 11 a.m. one inside, except that the congregation does not join in hymns or responsive readings, and there is no kneeling or rising. Musicians from film studios provide outdoor music, which takes the place of hymn-singing. Loud-speaker system saves the pastor's voice.

Usher kneels for blessing before passing among cars with regular collection plate.

Although one of the first, the Rev. Mr. Hammar is not the only parking-lot divine. Outside Cincinnati, O., is a drive-in congregation with facilities for 2,000 cars, and others meet in Iowa and Michigan as well as other states. And according to church officials, drive-in churches are growing. Said one of them recently: "Drive-ins are plain common sense. The church must fit the pattern of people's lives, and that's exactly what drive-ins do. After all, it was Christ who preached to the multitudes just as He found them."

Scantily clad youngsters perch on convertible as Rev. Hammar reads day's Scripture lesson. This family was going surf-fishing, even had a rod in car. Pastor approves.

Collection is about same for drive-in congregation as for regular membership at conventional service. Drive-in congregation helps support regular church activities.

Pastor Hammar watches last autos leave, feels pleased drivers have stopped for service before leaving for Sunday pleasure trips. "It strengthens the church," he says.

Luscious, ripe plums, in all the glory of autumn coloring, make preserves rich in flavor for eating pleasure the year round. The recipes are easy, too.

Plum Preserves

BY BETH MERRIMAN
PARADE'S FOOD EDITOR

CAPTURE THE RICH FLAVOR of luscious plums, imprison it in shining jelly glasses for year 'round eating pleasure. It's so easy, with liquid or powdered fruit pectin, to make jelly, jam or preserves that are full-flavored and perfect in consistency. No chance of failure, no loss of color or fruit flavor, because cooking time is so brief. Try these recipes:

Plum and Grape Jelly

3½ cups juice 4½ cups sugar
1 box powdered fruit pectin

To prepare juice: stem and crush 1½ pounds fully ripe grapes; crush thoroughly about 2 pounds fully ripe plums. (Do not peel or pit.) Combine fruits. Add ¾ cup water; bring to boil; cover, simmer 10 minutes. Place in jelly cloth or bag; squeeze out juice. Measure 3½ cups into a large saucepan.

To make jelly: Place saucepan holding juice over high heat. Add powdered fruit pectin; stir until mixture comes to a hard boil. At once stir in sugar. Bring to a full rolling boil and boil hard ½ minute, stirring constantly. Remove from heat, skim, pour quickly into glasses. Paraffin at once. Makes about 8 six-ounce glasses.

Ripe Plum Relish

3½ cups prepared fruit ½ cup vinegar
6½ cups sugar ½ bottle fruit pectin

To prepare fruit: Pit (do not peel) about 2 pounds fully ripe plums. Cut in pieces; chop fine. Add ¼ to 1 teaspoon each cinnamon, cloves and allspice or any desired combination of spices. Measure 3½ cups fruit into very large saucepan.

To make the relish: Add sugar and vinegar to fruit in saucepan; mix well, place over high heat, bring to a full rolling boil; boil hard 1 minute, stirring constantly. Remove from heat; at once stir in bottled fruit pectin. Stir and skim by turns for 5 minutes to cool slightly and prevent floating fruit. Ladle quickly into glasses. Paraffin at once. Makes about 10 six-ounce glasses.

Plum-Peach Jam

4½ cups prepared fruit 7½ cups sugar
1 bottle fruit pectin

To prepare fruit: Peel and pit about 1½ pounds soft ripe peaches. Grind or chop very fine. Pit (do not peel) about 1 pound fully ripe plums. Cut in small pieces; chop. Combine fruits; measure 4½ cups into large saucepan.

To make the jam: Add sugar to fruit in saucepan; mix well. Place over high heat, bring to full rolling boil; boil hard 1 minute, stirring constantly. Remove from heat; at once stir in bottled fruit pectin. Stir and skim by turns for 5 min. to cool slightly and prevent floating fruit. Ladle quickly into glasses. Paraffin at once. Makes about 12 six-ounce glasses.

Plum-Banana Jam

3½ cups prepared fruit 4½ cups sugar
1 box powdered fruit pectin

To prepare fruit: Mash 3 ripe bananas to fine pulp. Pit (do not peel) about 1½ pounds fully ripe plums. Cut in small pieces; chop. Combine fruits; measure 3½ cups into large saucepan.

To make the jam: Measure sugar; set aside. Place saucepan holding fruit over high heat. Add powdered fruit pectin; stir until mixture comes to a hard boil. At once stir in sugar. Bring to a full rolling boil; boil hard 1 minute, stirring constantly. Remove from heat, skim, ladle quickly into glasses. Paraffin. Makes 8 six-ounce glasses.

YOUTH SETS THE TROTTING PACE

Kids are pushing out grand-daddies at trotting tracks

YOUNG JOE O'BRIEN who handles a sulky as though it had wings and a jet engine, swung "Harvey King" diagonally across New York's Roosevelt Raceway, fighting to put him on the rail in the fifth trotting race.

At the same instant, Leon Caton, driving "Gay Knight," conceived precisely the same idea. As the two sulkies came abreast, neither would give a hair's breadth. Something had to happen. It did. Wheels locked and the two sulkies crashed. The same thing occurred in the next race.

To the old-timers among the 20,000 who watched O'Brien's dashes, crack-ups marked a new era in what has hitherto been the dignified sport of harness racing. Some of them ran their fingers through gray hair and voiced their doubts:

"It wasn't like this in the old days," one said.

"When I was a boy, they ran heady, smart races with their eyes on a stopwatch. They used to win by skill. Now it's just muscle. Maybe it's more exciting this way, but it sure ain't like they used to drive."

It isn't, either. Until rather recently harness racing was likely to be the sport of elderly gents with snowy locks and Angel Gabriel chin whiskers. A number of the best drivers, like Ben White, Tom Berry and Sep Palin, still fall into this category, and to them belongs a racing touch as soft and sure as a mother's caress. But it's the young fellows who are grabbing the spotlight and the purses.

O'Brien's harness racing strategy, for example, is simplicity itself: get in front and stay there. Johnny Simpson, 29, goes easy, then pours it on in the stretch. It's not artistic driving, but it wins races.

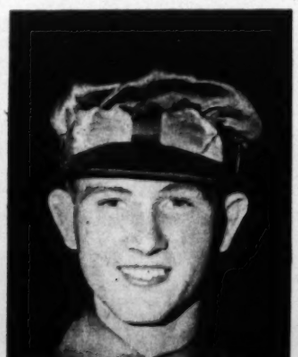
Dick Thomas, 29, last year's second leading driver, sometimes lets his horse run its own race. Even kid drivers like Eddie Wheeler, 18, and Dickie Buxton, 20, will brush wheels with grand-dads without a "Sorry, Pop!"

There's no doubt that the 3,500 youngsters licensed to drive since 1942 have boomed purses, betting totals and attendance at the nation's 400 trotting tracks in the years since the end of the war.

PURSES UP, SO ARE BETS

Seven years ago, purses amounted to $1,160,000. This year, drivers will compete for around $10,000,000. At Roosevelt Raceway alone, mutuel betting will total around $200,000,000. It's going the same way at Aurora, Old Orchard Beach and at Goshen, N.Y. Said Harvey Bedell, a leading driver, recently: "Today's racing is really better. Maybe the kids don't drive like the old masters, and maybe they don't know all there is to know about a horse. But they do think fast and drive hard. That doesn't mean their racing is dirty, either. It's just tough and it's sure good to watch. Maybe we've been missing something exciting for a long time."

Joe O'Brien, 32, placed sixth on the list of money winners. He collected $99,360 last year.



Dickie Buxton, 20, a protege of oldtimer Curley Smart, races often, regularly gets the purse.

John Simpson, 29, started driving at 16, has many famous horses in his public training barn.

What Becomes of Miss Americas?

Most are married now. Some make lots of money. But one lost a movie part because a director thought she wouldn't look good in a swim suit!

IN AMERICA one of the many things parents can look forward to when they welcome a baby boy, is that some day he may be president. If it's a girl the chances are four times as great she'll become Miss America. The latter is a better bet simply because we choose a new Miss America every year, compared to a reasonably new president every four years.

To get the lowdown on the most famous and imitated beauty contest in the world, and what happens to its winners, we had tea with six Miss Americas—a very trying assignment—because we kept trying to date them up and couldn't.

First let's get up to date and give you a picture of the Miss America Pageant. After earlier, somewhat amateur efforts, the real organized business of staging a nationwide plucking of American Beauties began in 1921. Primarily contrived to establish Atlantic City as the Babylon of the Bathing Beauty and incidentally to give local hotel-keepers and merchants a reason to extend the summer season a week beyond Labor Day, the event has become as traditionally American as hot dogs, chewing gum, radio giveaways and throwing pop bottles at baseball umpires.

Whereas the earlier winners were crowned with halos and then had to go out and shift for themselves, the Miss America of today finds herself established in a lucrative one-woman business.

Take Miss Bebe Shopp (1948), the reigning beauty. Since she won the title in September of '48, the Hopkins, Minnesota, brunette has already earned more than $30,000 in cash, not to mention being the recipient of countless little trinkets such as a piano, a mink coat, flat silver and a music scholarship to Northwestern University. Bebe, if you're the mercenary type, thus becomes the most successful of the peachie specie.

But, interest in the contest is just beginning to warm up and future Miss Americas should earn as much as, or even more than Miss Shopp. So says Miss Lenora S. Slaughter, executive director of the Pageant, who books the winners on their lengthy personal appearance tours (sans commission).

Miss America of 1949 and all her successors will receive a $5,000 educational scholarship, a brand new car, oodles of other valuable gifts and, unless she's reticent like Barbara Jo Walker (1947) of Memphis, Tennessee, and prefers to marry and settle down rather than enter into the hoopla, she'll make a minimum of $10,000 in cash the first six months.

★ ★ ★ ★

About the only other Miss America who was reluctant to follow the routine laid out for her by the Pageant's mentors, was Venus Ramey (1944), of Kentucky. Venus was a Southern Rebelle, who went her own way, skipped the tour, played 10 weeks of vaudeville, did a little night club singing, made the song "One Salted Peanut" fairly popular—then, according to last reports, retired to her Kentucky plantation.

Marilyn Buford (1946), who was a student at UCLA when she was voted a Miss America, didn't have far to travel when Hollywood signed her to a contract. The studio paid her handsomely, but didn't give her a chance to emote before much else than a still camera. She hied abroad to attend the University of Berlitz, where she majored in languages. While in Rome, she did as any good Roman would do — she met movie director Roberto Rossellini, who promptly signed her to a contract.

Bess Meyerson (1945) was a Hunter College graduate, who settled down in her native New York to marry Alan Wayne and raise Miss America of 1966. When she isn't playing with or 'tending to adorable little Barbara, Bess models, appears on television shows with artists like Russell Patterson and still manages to find time to supervise her very own music school.

Jean Bartel (1943) was the first college student ever to cop the coveted crown. Jean, who sang in "The Desert Song" with Alan Jones when she was only 14½, is a Kappa Kappa Gamma from UCLA and has earned more money on talent and less on gifts, than any of her long line of predecessors, or successors. Currently appearing as the feature attraction in a Parisian supper-club, Jean captivated the hearts of our good neighbors in Rio and Sao Paulo for six months, and has sung on radio and television and in some of the better nightclubs and theatres throughout the nation. Originally picked by Pageant judges Jeanette MacDonald and Cornell Wilde, one of the highspots in Jean's career was succeeding Miss MacDonald in a San Francisco light opera role.

★ ★ ★ ★

Jo-Carroll Dennison (1942) succeeded to the title by short spurts. As secretary to former Senator Earl B. Mayfield of Tyler, Texas, Jo was voted "Miss Citizen National Bank," then "Miss Tyler," then "Miss East Texas," before she became Miss America of 1942. Dad was a medicine show entertainer, so Jo had showbusiness blood running through her veins. Appearing in "The Jolson Story" and "Winged Victory," 'mongst other Hollywood epics, Miss Dennison forsook her career to marry the funnyman, Phil Silvers. Phil's courtship was quite unique. While you'd never think to look at his choice of a wife, that there's anything faulty about his eyes, Phil can't recognize his own mother unless he's wearing a pair of thick bifocals. "Sometime, Phil dear," Jo-Carroll once whispered to her ardent swain, "I'd like to see what you look like without glasses." Next evening when Phil called to take her to Chasens for dinner he appeared without his glasses, but with a Seeing Eye dog.

Rosemary LaPlanche (1941) is another Miss America who's been moderately successful in Hollywood. She's an R.K.O. starlet married to a radio-television producer.

Another model mother is Miss America Frances Burke (1940). She's the wife of Larence A. Kenney, a prominent Philadelphia businessman, and, like Bess Meyerson, she's got a reliable baby-sitter who makes it possible for Frances to continue to be one of the most popular fashion models in the Quaker City, and one of its leading social arbiters. It's a busy life.

When Miss Detroit of 1939, vivacious Patricia Donnelly (1939), was asked by artist George Petty what she'd do if she won the Miss America title, the former Peanut Queen of Virginia answered, "I'd drop dead!"—which turned out to be the overstatement of the decade. After her tour concluded, Pat thought she was all set for a career in pictures when Hollywood beckoned her for a movie part that required an orchidaceous shapely.

In slunk Miss America of '39. The director took one fleeting glance and shook his head. "Sorry, Miss," he said, "'you wouldn't look good in a bathing suit!"

Pat's married now to a New York public relations man.

The only Miss America who ever won the title twice was Mary Campbell (1922-3) of Newark, N.J. Mary was a two-time torch-bearer—she won in 1922 and just to prove she wasn't a flash in the panorama, repeated in '23—thereby inspiring a rule that no Miss America can succeed herself. Miss Campbell is now Mrs. Fred Townley of Newark, N.J. Her husband works for DuPont.

In case you're interested in vieing for the Miss America title in Atlantic City this September, here's a list you can check to see how you shape up. The average Miss America (who isn't average at all!), is 5 feet 6½ inches tall; she weighs 124⅜ pounds, has brown hair, a 34¼ bust, 24⅜ waist, 35⅛ hips, 13⅛ calf, an 8⅛ ankle, blue eyes and is a trifle over 18 years of age.

Of the last 21 Miss Americas, 4 have hailed from California, 4 from Pennsylvania, 2 from Washington, D.C., 2 from Ohio, and 1 each from Oklahoma, Illinois, Connecticut, New Jersey, Michigan, Texas, New York, Tennessee and Minnesota. That's a wide geographical spread.

In addition to the jackpot winner, from now on 14 runners-up will receive scholarships valued at $1,000 each, plus a similar scholarship for the contestant voted the most popular entry by her competing beauties. This poor kid will bear the title "Miss Congeniality." Can you imagine what an argumentative husband can do with that bit of background!

"Have you any advice for girls entering the contest?" we asked several of the past winners. "No," Bess Meyerson ananswered. "Every girl hopes deep down in her heart to win—but deep down in her tummy she doesn't expect to. So don't spend all your time looking in a mirror. Remember your appearance in a bathing suit is only ¼ the battle won—you still have to win votes for talent, personality, and how you look in an evening gown!"

Jean Bartel had a tip for the next winner, whoever she is. "When you go off on that good-will tour," she warns, "don't eat yourself out of circulation. With dignitaries clear across the nation honoring you with dinner, supper, breakfasts, and banquets—most of us outgrew our bathing suits from 5 to 15 pounds."

1943 Miss America, Jean Bartel (above) is currently appearing as a featured star in a Parisian supper-club. The first college girl to win the crown, she studied at UCLA.

1942 Miss America, Jo-Carroll Dennison, applies makeup to comedian Phil Silvers, to whom she is married. Her victory at Atlantic City led to several Hollywood offers.

Who will be Miss America, 1949?

ON LABOR DAY, yesterday's Miss Americas, like old champions retired at last to the sidelines, will be looking longingly at Atlantic City's huge Convention Hall. There, under the unblinking stare of a battery of pop-eyed judges, 53 beauties from 46 states, New York City, Chicago, Philadelphia, the District of Columbia, Canada, Hawaii and Puerto Rico will compete for the glory of becoming Miss America number 24. The winner, probably living in obscurity right now, will become the most-photographed beauty in the world.

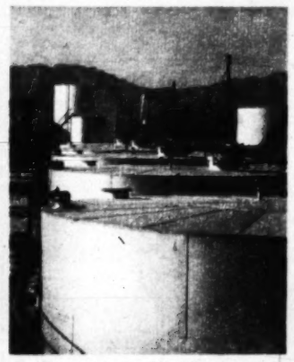
Picture Quiz

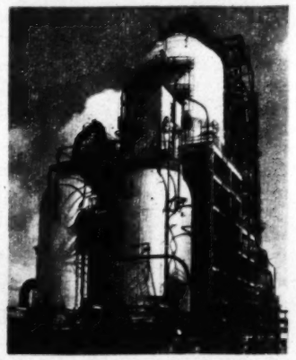
NINETY YEARS AGO today, tired drillers struck oil at the now-famous Drake Well in Titusville, Pa., and thus "brought in" the first oil well in the United States. Today, oil is the life blood of our economy. It fuels our planes, cars, and heats our homes. What do you know about production of this vital commodity? Answers are below.

1. Oil prospectors work closely with these scientists. Are they chemists, biologists, geologists, genealogists?

2. To check flow of oil through pipe line, is operator turning a valve, a well cap, a helm or an oil filter?

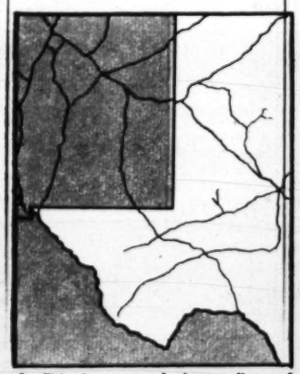


3. This stopover for oil enroute to users is called a tank circus, tank farm, tank yard or a tank yewmam?



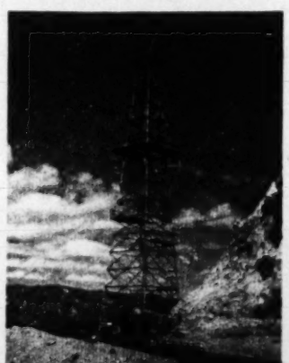
4. This structure is used to refine petroleum components. Is it a dog-biscuit, cat-cracker, or a bin?

5. The shape of this pumping device gives a clue to its name. Is it a crane, horse-head jack?

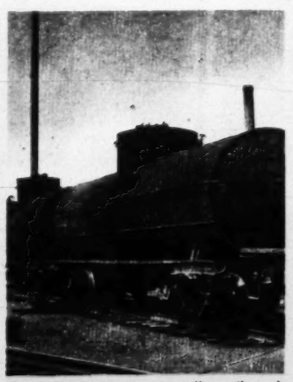


6. This is part of the outline of a state that is tops in oil output. Is it Utah, Oklahoma, or Texas?

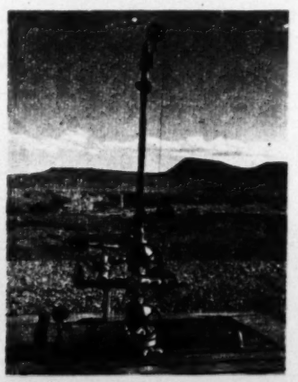
7. Here's a closeup of the business end of a prospecting rig. Is it a plunger, bit, stirrup or mixer?



8. This structure is found wherever oil fields are. Is it a derrick, fire-control station or beacon?



9. Besides "tank cars," railroad men call these wheelbarrows, oil cans, hogbacks, heater cars?



10. Oil men use this to cap a well. Is it a Christmas tree, Easter bunny, sled-dog or main unit?

(1) Men pictured are geologists. (2) Valve checks flow of oil. (3) Tank farm. (4) Cat-cracker. (5) Device is a horse-head jack. (6) Texas tops others in oil production. (7) Bit. (8) Derrick. (9) Oil cans. (10) This well cap is known as a Christmas tree.

Why— are you Single?

Are you really sure you're "not the marrying kind?" A book reassesses life alone

THE BEAUTIES OF A GIRL named Martha were mainly spiritual. Lacking buck teeth, she came fully equipped with a homely face and sallow skin, bow-legs, and a lisp which her friends considered "a decided handicap."

Martha wanted to get married. But during her first three years at a militantly co-ed college, her social life consisted of precisely four dates, all blind, arranged through compassionate roommates. For Martha, the prospects of marriage seemed as thin as the gold on a cheap wedding ring, and she began to remind herself of some of the more repulsive figures in the comic strips.

But the week after she received her A.B., Martha was married.

How? Simply because the campus was flooded with returning veterans during her last year. There were not enough girls to go around, and Martha, complete with bow-legs and lisp, got her man because demand far outran supply.

Martha's experience is drawn from "Why Are You Single?"*—a new book containing 14 essays on why a surprising number of people never marry.

Authors of the studies, compiled by Hilda Holland, are among the nation's most distinguished sociologists, physicians, psychologists and marriage counselors. Their book is directed toward single people, and to the parents of young adults who seem headed for a life in bachelor apartments or spinster's back bedrooms.

Throughout America, thousands of men and women live alone and try—not always successfully—to like it. "Why Are You Single?" examines motives, tells what to do.

REASONS LIE DEEP

People stay single, these authors say, for an infinity of reasons, none of them simple. Some, like Martha, want to be married, but can succeed only where there is a buyer's market in husbands or wives. (The book, by the way, includes a discussion of the "geography of mating," and charts of the states where marriage prospects are best.) But most spinsters and bachelors have far more deep-seated reasons for telling themselves "I'm not the marrying kind," or "I'd never give up my freedom." For them, "Why Are You Single?" describes the mechanism of "deserting" the marriage process, charts the growth of Oedipus complexes which leave adults hopelessly tied to parents, discusses "marriage neuters."

To these authors, marriage is the natural state of man. They agree with a seventeenth century writer who noted that "The bachelor is one who enjoys the chase but does not eat the game," and pass along the advice of Socrates: "By all means, marry. If you would get for yourself a good wife, you will be happy forever after; and if you get a common scold like my Xanthippe—why then, you will become a philosopher."

"Why Are You Single?" by Theodore Reik and others, compiled by Hilda Holland, Farrar Straus & Co., New York, $3.

Catcher's mask in soft felt with crocheted veil has become the thing to wear to ball games in Hollywood. Hat resembles baseball cap worn backwards.

Out to the Ball Game

Baseball hats make a hit in Hollywood

Basic baseball cap in felt with long bill, ribbon trim, has segmented crown stitched like baseball. Bag is of soft natural leather.

WHEN it comes to baseball, many American women don't know a balk from a bean-ball. But they can spot a home run in fashion anytime.

In Hollywood, for instance, they were quick to pick up one of the most novel style innovations of the season, a trend directly inspired by what goes on in a ball park. As a result, baseballs, bats, fielders' gloves and catchers' masks all are making a contribution to feminine wardrobes this summer.

The new idea was born one night when Rex, the Hollywood designer who won a certain measure of fame for creating Hedda Hopper's headgear, went to a ball game and came back with a neat triple play of his own: a hat copied from the baseball cap, a coat with baseball buttons and a variation of accessories ranging from a bat-handled umbrella to a pocketbook that bears a distant resemblance to a worn-out catcher's mitt.

Rex's creations, first shown at a charity fashion show in the Hollywood ball yard, were an immediate hit. Today they are available from coast to coast with the result that whether the wearer is Dodger fan, partisan of Milwaukee's Brewers or a follower of the San Francisco Seals, she may dress the part.

Complete ensemble for ball game includes black cap trimmed with white ribbon, lightweight wool topcoat, plastic baseball buttons, umbrella with bat for handle.
